

THREE DEMOCRATS WANT CENSUS JOB

No Wild Scramble Develops for Position of Supervisor.

$1500 SALARY IS OFFERED

W. D. Bennett, John H. Bittner and Unidentified Resident of Oregon City Are Applicants.

No wild scramble has developed for the job of supervisor of census in the Oregon congressional districts. The census will be held next year, Uncle Sammy displaying commendable curiosity every year to ascertain to what extent he is growing.

Each congressional district will have a supervisor, who will have charge of the gathering of the population statistics within his territory. The supervisor will also be the target for objections and will be held responsible for the accuracy of his figures. It is a big job, a responsible, nerve-racking one, but Uncle Sam says that $1500 is enough to pay for it. Ten years ago $1500 was fair compensation, for in those days the high cost of living was not as noticeable as it is now—colliers could then be bought two for a quarter, and so could cigars, and a square meal was possible for the current market quotation on a sandwich and a cup of Java.

Because of the small pay, the usual throng of applicants is conspicuous by its absence. Thus far only three men have expressed a willingness to be supervisors: W. D. Bennett, John H. Bittner and an unidentified resident of Oregon City.

Supervising the canvass of a census is not a partisan job, but it is observed that only democrats are seeking the places. Applicants for supervisor have to fill out a blank as full of questions as the draft questionnaire, and these blanks are available through the secretary of commerce, Washington, D. C.

What is considered as the main drawback to the job is the parsimonious compensation. If the government would tilt the wage more men would be willing to make a try for the commission. Fifteen hundred dollars for the work, which will require a year, although the actual census taking will end in a few weeks, is less than thousands of shipyard workers are paid, who have no responsibility, and who herdery are better paid, for they get $100 a month and found.

As two of the three applicants are Portlanders, there is a possibility that to prevent them from being assigned to the first or second congressional districts, Multnomah County composing the third district.
