LOW TIDE AT SUNSET HOUR CONDUCIVE TO PROMENADING

Automobiles Take to the Miles Long Stretch of Smooth, Hard Sand and Horseback Riders Enjoy Themselves.

Lifesize At Rockaway

— ROCKAWAY STUDIO.

NORTH BEACH, Wash., Aug. 2.—(Special.)—Low tide at the sunset hour this week has given many an opportunity to walk and the beach has become a great promenade for the cottagers. Automobiles, too have taken to the miles-long stretch of smooth hard sand and horseback riders seem to find riding on the beach at evening a delightful diversion. The low tide has left many crabholes where the youngsters come for a final sail with gay painted boats or where they beg to be allowed to wade before going home to make ready for bedtime. Interest in the numberless fishing craft brings spectators to the beach and the splendid sunsets never fail to claim the admiration of the evening crowds.

The sun scarcely sets when bright spots along the beach tell that bonfires have been lighted. The very earliest ones are generally lighted for children and later the older groups gather around the fires to sing and to roast mashmallows and potatoes.

A big majority of the cottages are now occupied along the peninsula and there are many who come to the coast for the week-end. Several families are here for the month of August.

Among the prominent Portland summer visitors at the beach is Mrs. H. W. Corbett, who opened her home Friday. It is situated on the ocean front and is one of the most attractive on the peninsula.

An Oregon Beach Scene

Merchants are showing their most attractive wares, tempting the holiday folk who want to be tempted. Even the weather has been favorable to the care free summer colony, for cool, refreshing days have been many, giving opportunity for all kinds of beach activities.

One of the popular trips, which may be a walk if one goes a little way or a hike if one goes a long way, is the Tillamook head trip. The path leads along by the ocean, over stiles and between boulders, dips into the spruce woods and then—on the short trip, goes out to the ocean again. The harder trip is a steady climb up the mountain along the spruce logging road. When the climber reaches the top of the hill after a journey through fragrant woods a great stretch of country may be seen, including Seaside, the Necanicum, Gearhart and North Head. The view repays the hiker for his work.
