

KLAMATH BASIN APPLES EXCEL, COMPARING FAVORABLY WITH BEST OF OTHER DISTRICTS

LITTLE MISS CATHERINE WALTON, KLAMATH "PEACH," PROUDLY EXHIBITS PRODUCT OF HOME ORCHARDS.

PEOPLE do not usually think of the Klamath basin as a district where fruit is grown. It is more widely known for the wonderful forage crops that make it famous with stockmen, where thousands of sheep are wintered on alfalfa farms and beef cattle brought from the ranges to feed yards, or sent direct to the packing house at Portland. There was a surprise in store for the business men who visited Klamath Falls with the southern Oregon trade excursion last fall in a window exhibit of 23 varieties of apples grown in orchards in the vicinity of Klamath Falls.

Included in the showing made by the Baldwin Hardware company, that won first prize in the products contest, were the following varieties: Maiden Blush, Red Astrachan, Strawberry Pippin, Wolf River, Gloria Mundi, Newtown Pippin, Winesap, Baldwin, Strawberry Pippin, Tallman Sweet, Winter Pearmain, Rummel, Michigan Snow, Jonathan, Ben Davis, Bellflower.

The apples shown in the picture are from three local orchards, the one in her right hand, a Wolf River, measuring 1 1/2 inches in circumference and weighing 29 ounces; in the left hand a Gloria Mundi, weight 21 ounces. The four Newtown Pippins on the plate weight four pounds and eight ounces. The winsome smile of Catherine is tinged with embarrassment because it discloses the absence of a tooth supposed to have been broken by biting a winter apple too early in the season.
