

BRYAN INDICATES PLANKS HE WANTS
 Wets to Be Put on Record by Rollcall, Says Speaker.

MOVE TAKEN FOR TREATY
 Anti-Profitteering Plank That Will Result in Jailing of Offenders Will Be Demanded.

low every man to be heard. The surest way to create dissension and hard feeling, he said, is to prevent a man from having his say. In this part of his speech he gave decidedly the impression of being urbane, tolerant, and eager to do his part toward harmony. He told of the time he was on the platform committee of the St. Louis convention of 1904, when there was the greatest diversity of view and when the committee sat for 18 hours continuously in intellectual strain such as he had never endured before. But, he said, at the end of the day a platform that was reported unanimously and adopted unanimously. Very distinctly he gave the idea that if complete freedom of discussion were allowed, if no one was squelched or elbowed out, there could perfectly well be harmony here.

Place Resisted Admittedly.
 Then he turned closer to his subject. He said he had just this morning been made a member of the committee on resolutions, which writes the platform. Here again he said he violated no confidences in telling the audience that he had not been placed on this important committee against his will. He said, quite frankly, that on this committee he would have some cause very close to his heart, and having said this, he swung into his theme with old-time fervor.

He again repeated his statement that the surest way to have harmony is to let everybody have his say, "and," he said, "if there is anybody who wants to put a wet plank in the democratic platform, I want him to be heard. Not only do I want him to be heard, but I want him to have the chance to put his plank before the convention. Not only do I want the convention to pass on it, but I shall demand a rollcall. If there are any delegates in this convention who want to vote in favor of a wet plank, I want their positions written down in black and white, so that I can tell every one of their people back home exactly what they did. If there is to be any wet plank in this platform, it is not going to be written in secret places and adopted by furtive means. The name of the author of any such plank of every man who votes for it must be known to all the world."

Women's Vote Considered.
 "I propose to let the members of my party know whether any bunch of brewers can tie their hands. There are 25,000,000 women who are going to vote in this election for the first time, and I propose to let them know whether they can vote for their ideals through the democratic party or whether it is the purpose of the democratic party to deliver them to the brewers."

"I propose to make my party stand right on this question, or else let the brewers take the party over; but I propose to make them take it over openly, not secretly."
 Then, having made it clear that he would resist any efforts of the wets to get a plank into the platform, he passed on and took the other position, about which all the party managers have been worrying. He made it clear that he would not be content merely to demand a wet plank, he made it most emphatic that he would insist upon the party adopting an affirmative dry plank. He scored the failure of the republican party to adopt an affirmative plank and of its total silence on the prohibition question.

Lodge's Speech Scored.
 He jeered at the failure of Senator Lodge's keynote speech in Chicago to allude to prohibition. He glowed with indignation that anybody should take the position that prohibition is still an open question after the supreme court of the United States has passed on it favorably. He left no doubt of not merely his intention but his burning determination to make the party go on record for or against an affirmative plank indorsing prohibition and said he "proposed to show the world whether the democratic party is an institution which can ask for the votes of 25,000,000 decent women, or whether it is merely a doormat to a saloon."

From prohibition he passed to the other plank. He said the democrats must adopt an anti-profitteering plank. Here again he jeered at the republicans. He said that the republican platform wasn't entirely silent on profiteering as it was on prohibition. He said the republican platform does contain an anti-profitteering plank, "but," he said, "it is the shortest plank in the platform. It contains 18 words, and not one of the 18 words means anything whatever."

Real Plank Wanted.
 The reason, he said, is that nearly all the profiteers were in the republican convention, or if they were not in the republican convention, they were in the gallery or in the Blackstone hotel. What few profiteers were not at the republican convention are out here now, "and," he said, "I propose that this democratic convention shall adopt a profiteering plank which will write into the republican party every profiteer there is." The reason, he said, is that "I propose that all these profiteers shall go to prison and I want them to go to prison as republicans and not as democrats." In talking about his profiteering plank, Bryan was less vehement and more humorous than in the fiery earnestness of his discussion of the prohibition plank.

Also, in talking of the labor plank he dropped into a note of unexcited discussion, the point he made was that the labor plank should treat the employer and employe exactly alike, but should aim primarily at the benefit of the third party to the case, the public. Specifically he said that the way to prevent strikes is exactly the same as the means proposed for preventing war by the peace treaty.

Compulsion Is Opposed.
 He said it should not be compulsory for either party of strikers to accept the findings of a court, but he said it should be compulsory on all parties to the case not to strike until there had been six months of investigation and after the investigation three more months for the public to acquaint itself with the rights and wrongs of the case. The moral force of this process, he said, is all that is needed.

When Bryan came to the league of nations he again reached the same heights of vehemence as when he spoke of prohibition. The point he emphasized in connection with the league of nations plank is that there

SCHUYLEMAN CASE IS UP

 proper reply that others of the delegation who have sought to slap the people in the face by denouncing him were no less Wilson fanatics than he a few months ago. He intimates that, the latter fact being true, some of the other members of the delegation should be examined to determine their competency to sit and act for the voters of Oregon.

Mr. Schuyleman appreciates that he is up against a badly bossed convention and that probably he cannot win, but he declines to let the bosses override the will of 10,000 legal voters in Oregon without telling the world all about it. He has made a good impression on others, outside the Oregon delegation, to whom he has told his troubles. He has impressed the outsiders generally as a sincere man of fixed convictions and not susceptible to the will of any of the big bosses who dominate this convention.

The surprise to the outsiders appears to be that such a case should arise from Oregon, the birthplace in the United States of genuine popular government and the modern cradle of American liberty. Some of the bosses obviously are shocked at the heartless manner in which the steamroller has been run over the Wilson enthusiasts from Oregon, but they feel that the convention cannot upset the verdict of the state's delegation, the issue being one to be referred back to the voters of Oregon in some way under the great referendum system first established in that state. Mr. Schuyleman expects to lose before the "credentials" committee, but he believes that the democrats of Oregon will find some method of holding a solemn referendum on the outrage committed in the name of conservatism, for that is what the action of the Oregon state central committee is called. To Mr. Schuyleman was denied a seat by the council of 12, admittedly because he was regarded as a "torpedo." Meanwhile Mr. Schuyleman is waiting around, seeking through some outside channels to obtain a seat for himself and his loyal wife, who stands by him in his fight, confident that right as she sees it and as her husband sees it will in the end triumph over might.

W. Reese, laborer, 25, was arrested at First and Madison streets yesterday afternoon by a squad of inspectors and was charged with larceny from a dwelling.

Argentine Legion forms Spencer Ely Post organized in Buenos Aires.

Buenos Aires.—The recently organized Buenos Aires post of the American Legion will be known as "Spencer Ely post." Spencer Ely was the first American residing in Argentina to volunteer to serve his country in France and the first to fall of the Argentine contingent.

On his arrival in France, Ely joined the 15th regiment (the old fighting 89th of New York) and was killed at Chateau Thierry. After having been wounded in action he was carried to a dressing station, from which he refused to be removed until more seriously wounded comrades had been taken to the rear. Before his turn came the dressing station was blown up by a German shell.

Ely was a native of Flushing, New York and a descendant of General Schuyler of the American revolution. His family resided in Buenos Aires for about 15 years.
