registered mohair goats to all the Angora-raising districts of the United States. It is an industry little known, but increasing steadily.

The Angora goat, which has achieved honors for Oregon, was grown by William Riddell & Sons, Monmouth, Or., who for more than 25 years have been breeding Angoras on their Polk-county farm. It is an aristocrat of the goat family, and its registry number is up in the eightieth thousand as recorded by the American Angora Goat Breeders' association. The American registry of mohair goats began 20 years ago. When the first records were started, William Riddell was raising goats. He had his flocks inspected and entered on the purebred list, and has kept his flock pure ever since. The firm is known throughout the world as breeders of Cotswold, Lincoln and Romney Marsh sheep.
