FURS AND MYSTERY

By N. M. Ungar.

When you buy furs, it is well to invest in them, rather than to speculate. There's a marked difference between the two.

Whenever a fur piece is greatly underpriced, there is a reason for it, and do not permit the dealer to tell you that many, many times the warm or because you're a favored customer, or any such tomfoolery. Find out why! Take fox skins, for example. A legitimate fur dealer may show you a fine large muff and throw, made from fine peltries of unusual size, and quote you a very fair price on it.

Before you purchase, you remember that so-and-so, around the corner are having a heavily advertised sale. You decide, as is your privilege, to go and see what they are offering. Fine! But they are all ready for you and show you a set at a lower price and apparently identically the same as you were looking at in the legitimate store, but which is really worth only half as much.

"Sour grapes?" Not so—here is the little darkie in the woodpile. An unscrupulous furrier can take a very small fox skin, or most any other kind of peltry, and expand it to about twice its size, but its intrinsic value does not expand accordingly.

The skin is laid face downward and slit many, many times down the wider part by cuts about half an inch apart and running parallel to each other. Common sheep skin strips are then cut and inserted in these slits and sewed along each edge, making the back look like a birdseye view of a freight yard, although the deception cannot be detected on the fur side, owing to the great density of the fur.

When such a piece is made into a muff or throw, the padding and the lining prevent one from feeling the heavy seams inside the skin, but if you will press the piece hard between the two hands and rub slowly you will have the sensation of passing your fingers over a silken covered washboard.

So, after all, you find that the genuine article in the honest man's store represented true value, while the "special reduction" was no reduction at all—but decidedly an inflation.

Use care to shun the animal that "grows" to twice its size after it is killed, and beware of the wolf in sheep's clothing.
