BRYAN EULOGIZES WATER IN HIS CONVENTION ADDRESS

Peace and Prohibition Go Hand in Hand, Says Commoner, When Urging Adoption of Five Platform Amendments.

William Jennings Bryan

people. If there be any here who would seek the support of those who desire to carry us back into bondage to alcohol, let them remember that it is better to have the attitude of one soul saved from drink than the applause of a drunken world. (Great applause.) It is better to have the mothers of the land think of our party as they press their babes to their breasts and thank God that they are now safe from the temptations of the saloon. Aye, far better than to hear all the hurrahs that can come from those who would make money by selling poison to their fellow men who would for money raise the death rate of our little children in their neighborhood. (Applause.)

"And now, because of the limitations placed upon my time by parliamentary procedure, I cannot say more than to say that I am in favor of the amendment, only stopping to add that I wish it were possible to discuss in the entire one question at a time. (Cries of 'Go on, go on.')"

"I shall speak of prohibition again when I use the 20 minutes that I have in closing. (Applause.)"

"Now, let me in a moment's time ask you to consider four other amendments which, in my judgment, would help our party to win."

"The first is a national bulletin. We have no newspapers in this country except those under private control and these are divided into two classes, namely, those that are owned by honest and patriotic men and used for a patriotic purpose and those owned by predatory corporations which endeavor to deceive those who read their editorials and news columns. (Applause.) It is not fair to the readers who are left to the mercy either of the press or to be exploited by the subsidized papers that sell their readers for so much per head. The very best of our papers are owned and edited by men who are human and because human are honest. They cannot give both sides fairly even when they try. The organs of the plunderbund do not try to give either side honestly. The democratic party should declare that it is in favor of light rather than darkness, because its deeds are not evil. Democracy is not a religion and policies do not fear the light of day."

"A government publication, furnished to all who desire it, offers the only means by which the people can receive, through unpolitical channels, the information that they need. Such a bulletin, if issued by the party, would furnish the arguments on both sides. There would be advertising space for the proper presentation of the claims of candidates for office. (Applause.) These three things are necessary for the following reasons: First, because government is a mockery unless the people know to what they are consenting; (Applause.) second, the voters cannot vote intelligently unless they hear both sides."

"Out of the conflict of ideas comes truth. We believe with Jefferson that error is harmless when reason is left free to combat it. But reason cannot combat error unless it is presented to those who must decide. (Applause.) The third reason is that we do not want any more candidates for president, excusing the candidates who have governed is a mockery unless the people know to what they are consenting; (Applause.) second, the voters cannot vote intelligently unless they hear both sides."

"We believe that when we have won a victory that terminates a curse that has come down to man from the earliest ages we should not encourage further discussion of the subject or invite lawlessness in any part of the country. (Applause.)"

"If we simply declare in favor of the amendment, and the enforcement of it, we leave the way open for the change which the gentleman from New York proposes, namely, the change in the law increasing the alcoholic content, or in other respects modifying the content of permitted beverages and against any weakening of any other provision of that law."

"The prohibition amendment to the national constitution was submitted in the regular way. The resolution received five more than three-fourths of the votes, and in the house it received considerably more than two-thirds of the votes, the two leading parties casting about the same percentage of their vote for and against."

"The constitution requires that an amendment shall be ratified by three-fourths of the states; this amendment was ratified by 46 of the 48 states, nine more than the number required. (Applause.) The resolution submitting this amendment allowed seven years and one month to secure the necessary 36 states, and the 48 states ratified in less than 16 months."

"Every democratic state in the union ratified this amendment (applause); all but five of the republicans refused to ratify. Thirty-seven of the states have, by their individual action, voted to exclude the liquor traffic from their borders, and nearly all of the 37 states banished the saloon by popular vote."

"In some instances the question had been submitted as many as five times, and each time an increasing vote has been forced upon the nation without notice. Everyone now recognizes that the amendment is a part of our constitution, and that it is here to stay. (Applause.) Everyone admits that the liquor traffic is dead, never to be resurrected. (Applause and confusion.) The question is whether we shall quarrel over the manner in which it is to be allowed in a non-intoxicating drink? (Applause.) If you cannot get alcohol enough to make you drunk, why do you want alcohol at all? Why not cut it out altogether and go on about your business? (Great applause.)"

"It is argued that if you adopt the platform plank that I suggest some will leave the party. That is true; you cannot do anything good without giving some an excuse for leaving the party. But in politics you weigh the good against the bad. While we may lose some we will draw to our support a much greater number; and when these new recruits come they will come because of love for the principles for which we stand. (Applause.) They will not come because afraid with a disease of the throat; they will not come as invalids to abide for a time in a hospital. They will come because they stand for the home against the home's greatest enemy."

"If I were to select a text—I have already selected it. On the night of the 16th day of last January when, at the nation's capital, we celebrated the centennial of the signing of the new, I was honored by the leaders of this great cause with the privilege of being the last speaker at the meeting. I watched the clock and when it was within one minute of the time when this nation would become a nationless for evermore, I quoted a passage from the Bible—the language in which the angel assured Joseph and Mary that they were to take the young child Jesus back to the Holy Land—you recall the word: 'They are dead that sought the young child's life.' (Applause.) When you remember that King Alcohol has slain a million times more children than Herod the mad, what language can more appropriately express the joy in the hearts of parents today than those words: 'They are dead that sought the young child's life?'"

"Are you afraid that we shall lose some votes? Oh, my countrymen, have more faith in the virtue of the people. If there be any here who would seek the support of those who desire to carry us back into bondage to alcohol, let them remember that it is better to have the attitude of one soul saved from drink than the applause of a drunken world. (Great applause.) It is better to have the mothers of the land think of our party as they press their babes to their breasts and thank God that they are now safe from the temptations of the saloon.
