

NON-PARTISAN FIGHT GREATLY SIMPLIFIED

Only Three Filed for Court
Justices in Washington.

PRIMARY TO SETTLE ISSUE

Under Law, Candidates Receiving
Majority of Votes Cast Go on the Ballot Unopposed.

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 25.—(Special.)—With only four candidates filed for the non-partisan election for three supreme court justices, the contest is simplified to such an extent that it may be disposed of in the primary, September 14.

Under the law governing the election of supreme court justices, a candidate receiving a majority of all the votes cast for supreme court in the primary goes on the ballot unopposed and, with but four running for the three places to be filled, and with each voter presumably voting for three, the virtual election of three in the primary is probable. The candidates are the three sitting judges whose terms expire, Chief Justice Holcomb, Justice Bridges and Justice Tolman, and Lieutenant-Colonel Walter B. Beals, an ex-service man of Seattle.

Justice Bridges comes before the people for election for the first time, having been appointed to the supreme court by Governor Hart in June, 1919, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge Chadwick. He was born in Indiana in 1862 and admitted to the bar in Indianapolis in 1888. He came to Washington in 1899 and has been a leading lawyer of Grays Harbor county for many years. He was elected prosecuting attorney in 1905 and served one term as president of the state bar association. He donated his spare time and incidental expenses over a period of four years in preparation of the new probate code enacted by the 1917 legislature, which greatly simplified the procedure and cheapens the settlement of estates and makes better provision for widows and children. During the war Justice Bridges was very active in patriotic work in Grays Harbor county.

Holcomb Active in Law.

Chief Justice Holcomb was also born in Indiana and practiced law in Evansville, Ind., following graduation from the Chicago college of law in 1892. He located in Ritzville, eastern Washington, in 1894, was appointed prosecuting attorney for Adams county in 1895 and elected to the office in 1896. In 1898 he was appointed commissioner of arid lands by Governor Rogers. He was twice elected judge of the superior court of Adams, Benton and Franklin counties, 1908 and 1912, and was elected to the supreme court in 1916, serving as chief justice since June, 1919. Between times, Judge Holcomb built up an extensive law practice in eastern Washington, served as city councilman, mayor, member of the school board and director of the public library of Ritzville, and raised six children, three of the boys, who volunteered for service in the world war. Justice Tolman is standing for election to the supreme bench for the first time, having been appointed to fill a vacancy in 1918. He was born in Illinois in 1861, and was graduated from the law department of Northwestern University at Chicago in 1888. After practicing law there until 1892, he located in Spokane. He gained a state-wide reputation as the author of the Tolman commission bill and by his leadership in the passage of that act to establish a state railway commission, while representing a Spokane constituency in the state senate, 1901-1903. He later served as a member and as president of the Spokane school board and during the war was chairman of district appeal board No. 1 for eastern Washington in the settlement of questions arising in the application of the selective service act for the supreme court. Judge Tolman's son was an army aviator during the war and received injuries which nearly proved fatal.

Veterans Give Support.

Lieutenant-Colonel Walter B. Beals of Seattle has practiced law here for 29 years. He enlisted as a member of the National Guard of Washington in 1909, a private, and rose to the rank of major. In 1915 he went overseas with the 81st division and was promoted to lieutenant-colonel while in France. The division with which he fought served first in the Vosges mountains and later on the Meuse, fighting until 7 o'clock on the morning of the day that the armistice was signed. It was then at the apex of the American wedge that was being driven towards the Briey coal fields. Colonel Beals has been a member of the Sons of the American Revolution for 29 years, and served as its state president in 1917.

He was elected state commander of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, a body of civil war officers and their descendants. This honor was conferred while he was in France. He is also a member of the American Legion and the Society of Foreign Wars, and his candidacy is supported by veteran organizations generally throughout the state. He has never before been a candidate for public office.

Youth Attends Chemawa Indian School but Reindeer Ranching
Found More Attractive.

One year of automobiles, street cars, moving picture shows and modern schools is enough for Donald Neuyak, a youthful Eskimo hailing from King Island, located 50 miles in Bering Strait from the Alaskan coast.

Donald arrived in Portland last week from the Chemawa Indian school in Oregon after spending a year in that institution. He has gone to Seattle and is ready to embark on the first vessel that will take him to Nome. A year in an up-to-date environment with all modern conveniences, into which he was shifted from the bleak and stormy barrens of King Island, has not captured the fancy of Donald. It's back to Nome and King Island for him, judging from his interest in the next sailing to the north. "My father," says Donald, "is a reindeer man. He has nearly 200 reindeer, and for many years I helped him until now I have 20 deer of my own. I had 60 before I left for the Chemawa school last year, but I will only have half when I get back because I must pay for having them taken care of."

Donald is 21 years old. At Chemawa he learned shoemaking, tailoring, farming, horseboeing and harness making. Donald, however, doesn't think much of the last two studies, inasmuch as his country has dogs and reindeer instead of horses. One of Donald's classmates at Chemawa was Anna, a pretty Eskimo girl of 19 years, whom Donald had known previously in Nome, where both attended a Christian mission when children. Anna, it seems, left Chemawa for Nome last June.

Merchants Aid County Fair.
