MOVIE CABARET IS NICEST PARTY AND NOT EXPENSIVE

Wonderful Affair, and Spiffy, Too, for Honor Guest of Newlyweds, Young Mr. Paxton Discovers.

BY MARGARET NEWCOMBE.

YOUNG Mr. and Mrs. Paxton were just finishing breakfast in their pretty little yellow and white dining room, which was fairly aglow with the shiny newness of the wedding silver and mahogany. Claire Paxton disconnected the front door and brought her husband around the table beside his pretty little wife not more than a year before. Claire Owens had always been on the entertainment committees when she was in college, and she fairly exuded original ideas when she got her little mind at work.

John pushed back his plate and turned in his chair to face his pretty little wife with a cloud on his face. "I guess that's a little too much for us to tackle yet, Claire dear. It would cost an awful lot of money, wouldn't it? Some day I hope to be able—"

house five small card tables were laid for supper, and it took only the few minutes that they were removing their wraps upstairs to put the fruit cocktails in place. Three chafing dishes with creamed chicken were on the dining room table, all ready to be lighted. Everything had been gotten ready before the Paxtons had left for the movie.
