At all times you have been activity and about covered the whole today that a new freedom had been proclaimed as they flocked into the minded, modest gentleman, a patriotic White House gates, over the lawns public servant, an intense and pasand some of them actually into a part of the executive mansion itself. While other changes of far greater importance are going on inside executive departments of the government the altered policy of permitting the big iron gates of the White House grounds to stand wide open afforded the most noticeable and perhaps the most appreciated public diversion.

To children born since early in April, 1917, the privilege of roaming at will right up to the door of the residence of the president and first lady was a genuine treat

Mothers on Hand Early.

Obviously the mothers of Washington were the first to take notice of the change, because they began appearing with their children at the gates even before President Harding had started his breakfast. All day long and until late in the afternoon women and children swarmed through both of the entrances from Pennsylvania avenue.

The nearest that they had been allowed to come to the White House champions in staging for almost four years was on the avenue itself or Lafayette park, across the street. The police, it was evident, had received orders not to ings of persons who looked the part of destrable citizens, little or big, for Section 2, there was no show of authority on
