ore ninety and nine that safely lay theirer of the fold: was out on the hills away, from the gates of gold.

The words of the old gospel cong are somewhat applicable to a condition that has developed in an east Portland church, only in the local case there are 70 missing members and they are to be traced down by the pastor, although their habitat is in a city more than 100 miles away.

The situation in the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, Multnoman street and Union avenue, and the only one of this denomination in Portland, calls to mind the efforts of the two great branches of Methodism to form an organic union. This has not been consummated, although it has been under consideration for years. Scattle Church Closed.

About 10 years ago it appeared very probable that the northern branch of Methodism would withdraw from its activities in the southern states, and that the southern church would reciprocate by withdrawing gradually from other parts of the United States where the northern church prevailed, as one means toward hastening the proposed union.

The bishop of the southern church who at that time had jurisdiction of the Pacific northwest decided that in line with this policy the Methodist church, South, at Seattle should be church, South, at Seattle should be church, South, at Seattle should be church for the proposed of the campanage o closed and he gave orders that this be done and the entire membership of 70 be bodily transferred, as a matter of record, to the First church of Portland.

This was done, but parishioner sheep," and as a result practically the entire 70 are missing from the "fold," so far as accurate knowledge by their ominal pastor as to their present

Metive Canvasa to Be Made.

The Rev. J. B. Harris, pastor of First Methodist Episcopal church, South, states that his duties in Portland have kept him from visiting Seattle to hunt up the missing 70 parishloners, but that he is now formulating plans to make an active canvass to determine how many of the 70 are still living, where they are located and what may be their desire regarding church affiliation.

the South Sea Islands demands was keen. The major portion of the chum pack sold for $4.50 per case.

Nothing but pinks and cohoes remain in the local storehouses, the latter being packed very late, but only about 5000 cases were put up. These sell at about $12 a case.

The prices were good for the disposal of fish this year, sockeyes bringing $20 a case, cohoes $12, pinks $14 and chums $4.50.
