CAN'T you just picture the family phantoms coming up the street, the old coachman alighting, the old Dobbin to the hitching post, and the children hopping out and running to greet their checked grandma, who, awaiting Dobbin's family, whinnies, has hurriedly popped the pie into the oven and is in the doorway all wreathed in smiles?

PROPER BATHING HELPS BABY DEVELOP STRONGER VITALITY

Warm Room, Warm Water, Good Soap and Powder, and Plenty of Clean Clothes Essential.

BY SHEBA CHILDS HARGREAVES.

Nothing is a baby is one of the greatest pleasures the mother has—that is, after she overcomes the first nervousness in handling her baby. The first bath at which the mother officiates alone is a terrible rite. Bathing a young baby is somewhat like trying to bathe a glass of jelly—the fear is always present that he will break or dissolve, or something, but after a time this fear disappears, for the young baby is not so easily damaged as it would seem, and as he grows and takes such evident pleasure in his bath, the task becomes a joy to all concerned.

If the baby's health is to be a success from his standpoint there are certain rules which must be observed. The first one is that the room must be warm, and the clean clothing at hand to put on after the bath be well aired and warmed before the fire. A young baby chills very easily and may suffer if conditions are not right. The temperature of the water is important. For a young baby it should be about 100 degrees F., as shown by the bath thermometer. This temperature should be gradually lowered until at 6 months it is from 95 to 98 degrees in the winter and 92 to 95 degrees in the summer. A bath thermometer makes sure that the water is the right temperature, but if one is not at hand the water may be tested with the elbow; after the time-honored fashion of mothers. The books all recommend a thermometer, but I am forced to admit that many robust children have been raised without one.

and the child may take cold after-

Generally the bath is given just before the mid-morning feeding, when baby is dressed for the day. No one should bathe directly after eating, and it would be especially dangerous to bathe a baby with a full stomach. In very warm weather a cool water before going to bed is restful for a baby, but generally speaking, one bath a day is quite sufficient. Very delicate, thin babies are sometimes rubbed with olive oil in place of the bath with very beneficial results. A little olive oil rubbed into the skin after the bath strengthens a baby who is weak—the gentle massage helps as much as the oil, perhaps. It is well to twist a little of the oil of the physician if there is a question as to the advisability of reducing the number of baths.

Soft towels and wash cloths are very necessary for the baby's comfort. After being removed from the bath, the baby should be quickly patted and gently rubbed dry with an old soft towel, taking care to dry the creases in the skin and to apply a good pure talcum powder. Many uncomfortable, fretful babies are made so by neglect of these details. The real skill in handling a baby comes in dressing him and not so much in bathing him. All children object to too much fussing and turning and twisting about to fasten clothing. Skirts and dresses are best slipped on inside the other and put on over the feet, at one operation. Long-drawn-out toilets meet with strenuous opposition from even good-natured babies.

very light or the delicate mucous

The nose will also need attention at the time of the bath. The nostrils must be carefully cleaned to keep them free from obstruction so as to prevent mouth breathing as far as possible. A small orange stick with a swab of cotton on the end dipped in white vaseline is best for this purpose. This little operation should be performed with great delicacy by gently turning it from side to side—never pushing it up into the nose. If afraid to use the orange stick the end of the towel may be rolled and used in the same manner.

Hair Must Have Attention.

Then the baby's hair must not be forgotten. The first hair invariably falls out very soon and after that it is very easy to keep the scalp clean until the new hair grows long and thick. Soap may be used every day, but it must be well rinsed off. When partly dry it should be brushed upward in order to encourage it to curl. Every mother of course makes an effort to make her baby's hair curl—she would be an unnatural mother if she did not, but I am of the opinion, which my personal experience has led me to form, that curly hair will need no coaxing and straight hair simply refuses to curl on any account.

A scalp that is scaly and difficult to keep in order may be cleansed by rubbing a little vaseline on it; a sticky secretion which covers the scalp of some babies may be removed best by the application of a little lemon juice and washing well after gently combing it out. Great care must be taken in washing or combing the hair for the scalp is very sensitive and tender. In fact a light gentle touch is necessary at all times in handling the baby.

The inexperienced person reading this article would be led to suppose that bathing and dressing the baby takes about all the mother's time, but it is really a very simple matter once it is fully understood. Half an hour would be rather a long time to allot to a baby's complete morning toilet. In reality a dextrous mother will require about 20 minutes. The bath should never be omitted unless the baby has a severe cold, fever, or some trouble such as a rash which leaves the mother in doubt as to the best method of procedure.

Excuse Thought Not Good.

"I'm sorry I can't let you have your check today," said the harassed secretary, scowling. "It is waiting with several others for our president's signature, but he's laid up at home with gout."
