Sherlock Holmes' best thriller had nothing on the experiences of Colonel tauqua party on their trip through Australia and New Zealand.

To begin with, the colonel, who refrom his seven-months' tour Friday, said that one of the members of the party, Miss Jenny Noren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. F. The colonel visited with Lord Jellizoe, now governor of New Zealand and former commander of the British grand fleet during the war. He said the former naval commander was so democratic that he at times failed to maintain the proper dignity of a "rep. democratic that he at times failed to maintain the proper dignity of a "rep-resentative of the king," and for that reason was criticised by some there. Jellicoe, he said, spoke highly of Ac-miral Sims as worthy of a place with America's famous sea captains of 1812 and other wars. The American naval officers, the British commander said, were fully as good as the British.

Libel Suit Is Dropped. The colonel participated in a ceremony on the staff of the governor at Sydney when the former home of Iharles Wentworth, the George Washington of Australia, was turned over to the government. Wentworth was the man who obtained trial by jury for the Australians, whereas they had formerly been tried only by military sourt-martial. He discovered a pass through the mountains which opened up the interior of the country and wrote a book on Australia, which is still considered an authority.
