The little thigs are what count in baseball. Two little things, unimportant of themselves, but farreaching in their consequences, cost Portland yesterday's ball game. The score was Los Angeles 7, Portland 4. Both little things happened in the first inning. Neither of them looked like much at the time-it was afterwards that the damage came. Neither counted as an error, yet both hurt as much or more than an outright boot would have done. Biemiller was pitching for Portland in that first inning and the fast-ball king was zipping a mean shoot down the alley. McCabe, first Los Angeles batter, was an easy It looked like one of Biemiller's good days, for when he starts well this youth with the flat trajectory pitch is likely to be in-Poor Peg Is Made.

McAuley, the second batsman, hit a little single just beyond Sam Hale's reach down the third-base line. That was the legitimate fortune of war and Biemiller was not particularly worried. He settled to pitch himself out of danger at the systems of Charley Deal. the expense of Charley Deal.

And then happened Little Thing
No. 1. Deal flashed the hit-and-run sign to McAuley, but Biemiller had it, too, and pitched wide. Catcher Fuhrman had a 40-foot channel to the sea in which to nip McAuley at second, but his throw was low and hurried. It hit the ground well in front of the base and, though Brazil grabbed at it and stopped it in a great effort to tag McAuley, he conign't clutch the twisting sphere.

Griggs swung on a fast pitch, caught just a piece of it on the handle, popped a foul fly back of first base. It was not a deep fly nor a particularly hard fly. When Carpentier was hurt by Dempsey's heavy body blows he circled around and around, just out of range. avoiding Dempsey's steady advance and looking for a chance to shoot a left at Jack's body and drive that hard straight right to his chin.

There's no doubt that Carpentier was handleapped to some extent by having to wear the New Jersey pillows instead of the four-ounce glove used in England and France. This took some of the sting out of the blows he landed on Dempsey's chin. But, of course, Dempsey's punches were muffled just as much, and he might have brought Car-At Minseapolis 1, Milwaukee 3.
