

LAST TRACE OF THE FAMOUS OLD SEASIDE HOUSE HAS VANISHED

Final Touches on Broad Promenade at Popular Oregon Resort Obliterate All Material Evidence of Hotel That Once Was Rendezvous of Pioneer Families of Portland and Persons From Other Parts of World.

SEASIDE, Or., July 8.—(Special.)—From the rush and crush which featured the Fourth of July here, attention of vacationists reverted to the passing of the famous old Seaside house, a hotel that brought fame to Seaside before Oregon's sturdy pioneers were fairly settled on donated homesteads.

By a strange coincidence, the final touches on Seaside's most modern improvement, the broad promenade on the ocean front, were made this week, and just as the last boards were torn out of what once was the leading hostelry of the city the "ghost" in front of the hotel site was thrown open to view.

Just as Seaside, with its many facilities of today, attracts visitors from all parts of the world, so did the old Seaside house, back in the seventies, bring famous men and women from everywhere to this popular resort.

The second register used at the Seaside house is now on exhibit at the Seaside land office. This register first was used in the old Clarence hotel, which stood on the block bounded by Front, First, Couch and Davis streets, in Portland, in the early days. When this hotel was burned the register was protected by Ben Holliday and transferred to his Seaside hotel for use there. As a result the first half of the register is filled with the names of travelers who came to Portland during the seventies, while the latter half is filled with the names of guests who stopped at the Seaside house.

The register covers the period from 1876 to 1881, and on the last page of the book appear the rates, which were $2.50 a day or $14 a week for room and "keep."

The majority of Portlanders who stopped at the Seaside house—and there were many—did not give their home city the honor on the register. Instead they registered from Skippanon, which at that time was used as the boat landing just below Young's bay. The travelers would be taken from Skippanon to Seaside on stage.

The Seaside house was established and operated for many years by Ben Holliday, who was indeed a famous character. Before becoming "game host," Ben operated a pony express between St. Louis and Sacramento.

Among the well-known pioneer Portland folk whose names appear on the register are the following: Mrs. Isaac White, Philip Wasserman, Catherine Therkelson, Mr. and Mrs. James Laidlaw, C. H. Hawthorn, John A. K. Cronin, Levi White, B. Goldsmith, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Lewis and children, Sally Saly, Elizabeth, John and Robert W. Warren and baby and nurse; J. Lowenburg, Davis Burnside, Sallie Teal, James Gleason, John W. Holman, Julius Gleason, George E. Anderson and Mrs. Allen Lewis, George W. Weidner, George H. Chance, George E. Withington, John A. Porter, Dan Holton, Donnelly, D. Zan, Ed Norton, Mrs. Henry Hewitt, Miss May Failing, Henry Failing, George Good, Theodore Wygant, L. Pleschiner, Joseph N. Teal, Martin Finch, F. S. Akin, J. C. Flanders, H. F. Corbett, F. Nicolai, P. D. W. Hardenbergh, W. J. Van Schuyver, Sig Sichel, Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Chubb, Mark W. Gill, Wesley Ladd, Dave Lewis, B. Neustader, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Scott and children, Raleigh Stott, Miss Alice Wasserman, Mrs. J. K. Gill and daughters and Mark W. Gill.

Hotel Seaside, one of the finest beach resort hotels on the coast, now stands the site with Portland society and tourists of the world, that was held by the Seaside house in years gone by. The spacious lobby and rooms have been the scene of many informal social gatherings during the last week and numerous dinner parties also have been given.
