ELECTION BADLY NEEDED

Danger of Nationalists Obtaining Control Is Recognized; Real Crisis Faced at Present.

BY MAXIMILIAN HARDEN. Germany's Foremost Publicist, Copyright, 1922, by The Oregonian BERLIN, July 22 .- (Special Cable.) The German republic faces a midsummer crisis. The government is afraid to dissolve the relchstag and appeal to the people for fear that more nationalists would be returned. Every citizen, considering the government's timidity feels unsafe. The Hamburg banker, Max Warburg, whose brother is a partner in the American banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., a superlatively patriotic German, who, as a member of the first German peace delegation, started a movement for the rejection of the treaty, has been so threatened that police have ordered him not to leave his house.

Another banker, well known in the United States, Herr Denberg, ex-colonial minister, has decided after repeated menaces to sell his house in the Grunewald section, which has received a sinister reputation through the murder of Rathenau and the attack upon myself. Youth Attack After Debauch. The two youths ordered to slay me first squandered 350,000 marks on drink and women, then received their orders and acted when this money was gone. Yet thousands of people throughout Germany are inclined to excuse them because they supposedly acted for what they thought patriotic motives. Their arrangements were, as a matter of fact, entirely businesslike. The intermediary who received the order from Munich telegraphed them: "If everything is in order you can have more at your disposal; otherwise not, as we are financially em-barrassed. Get through with it and we can breathe again. I consider the present time—three days after

"No more concessions without compensation." The only question is, what kind of compensation? For a time it was hoped that England might be induced to yield on the Turkish question and adopt the French thesis of a peace in Asia Minor at the expense of the Greeks. This would have been in France's favor. But now that seems impossible.

The responsible ice companies of the city have been endeavoring to maintain firstclass service to families without raising the price of ice to them. To accomplish the above it will be necessary to eliminate needless waste and expense now incurred in the distribution and delivery of ice to residents. Everyone desires their ice delivered before noon. Who is going to pay for the idle men and equipment in the afternoon?

The ice man runs his route like the milk man, and when he is compelled to drive a mile or two from one part of his route back over that part of his route already covered by him, due to the fact that the housewife was not up, was not home, forgot to hang the card, changed her mind and concluded she wanted ice or did not have the refrigerator cleaned and made the driver wait while such cleaning was done, such unnecessary trips delay delivery to other customers and cost money that the public has to pay and is reflected in the price charged for ice.

Another unnecessary expense that must be reflected in the price is for the detailed clerical work and loss of accounts, caused by the charging of coupon books, with the driver as credit man. There is as much work and expense in handling a $4.00 or $8.00 account as there is in handling a $100.00 account. The book has to be paid for some time. Why not to the driver at time of purchase? The goodpaying public's credit is not in question, but wastefulness is. Should not the public which insists on having a charge account pay for the expense it incurs? The party who pays cash for the books and does not cause the expense should not have
