LLOYD GEORGE HELD

Premier Is Blamed for Latest Turk Eruption.

DANGER IS SEEN

No One Wants War, but No One Wants Turk Back in Europe, Says Gardiner.

(While the British public is unalterably opposed to any new war, it considers the one practical achievement of the last war the elimination of the Turk from Europe, and Mr. Gardiner says that Lloyd George, in declaring the empire was ready to defend the fruits of the war against attack, played into Poincare's hand and strengthened French diplomacy immensely. He thinks Lloyd George's power and influence are waning and the belief growing that before an English policy of peace can be pressed successfully against a French policy of militarism, England's affairs must be entrusted to more responsible hands).

(Copyright, 1922, by The Oregonian.) Britain's Greatest Liberal Editor, Eropean volcano is a superlative illustration of the levity of the Lloyd-George methods. When we flustration of the levity of the Lloyd-George methods. When we are right his political juggling puts us in wrong. The triumph of the Turks over the Greeks inevitably precipitated a grave conflict between French and British policies. A mast 80 feet high has been creted and a drag line with a radius of 300 feet is operated. At the end of the line is a steel-toothed encouraged the Greeks. The Victory of Kemal openly is halled in France as a victory over Eungland. The situation brought France and England to the brink of a momentous decision. France has only to stand aside to leave England alone to cope with Kemal's claim for possession of the Dardanelles and Constantinople and in conflict with the whole Mohammedan world.

Course Favored by French.
French popular opinion favored this course, but fortunately other considerations intervened. France and the little entente and they are threatened by a too triumphant rehabilitation of the Turk to Europe. Moreover, French interests in Asia Minor are great and they are threatened by a too triumphant rehabilitation of the Europe. Such considerations have modified the French policy, and at the end of last week it seemed that joint action between England and France to maintain the neutralization of the Dardanelles and Constantinopie was imminent. In the midst of the delicate negotiations Lloyd George flung a bomb in the shape of a sensational manifesto that the empire was ready to defend the fruits of the war against attack. Why was this issued? Was it an attempt to stampede France? If so, it was a fatal act in policy, as it gave France precisely the excuse she wanted to adopt an attitude of benevolent neutrality. Was it a domestic political move designed to recover lost personal prestige? Was it sheer irresponsibility?

The labor conference declared:

Every section has denounced the levity and recklessness of Lloyd George's proceedings. The chief mischief of the incident is that it misrepresents the attitude of the people. No one wants war, but no one wants the Turk back in Europe. For a century, the rule of the Turk For a century the rule of the Turk has been the curse of Europe

All Europe Is Involved. The one practical achievement of ne war seemed to be the final verthrow of the Ottoman tyranny If that tyranny was to be re-estab-lished under the protection of the most formidable military powers on the continent the situation would not be better than before the war but infinitely worse. It would but infinitely worse. It would permanently embarrass Anglo-

Turkey is one phase of the issue which involves the whole European problem and especially the fate of Germany. On this the interests and outlook of England and France are diametrically opposed and the serious developments in Asia Minor urer Ba gives French diplomacy a strong hand in pressing for its own plan of extremist action.

Incidentally the affair has re-acted seriously on Lloyd George's position in the country. There is a growing feeling of alarm at his irresponsible handling of weighty matters and his incurable tendency to approach world to approach world problems from the point of view of political strat-egy. His stock with all parties to approach world problems from the point of view of political strategy. His stock with all parties stands at the lowest point since the war and the suspicion that this latest demonstration was governed by electoral considerations prevails wikely. The conviction is growing that the oll can is not the best means of putting out the fire raging in Europe and that before an incomplete the point of view of political strategy. Kansas Representative Has New Railroad Plan.

Lockout Against Employes Illegal Also.

BY GRAFTON WILCOX (By Chicago Tribune Leased Wire.) WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 23.— Establishment of an industrial court -the Kansas idea in a federal field to deal with railroad disputes, has been placed squarely before congress in a bill introduced by Representative Hoch, who comes from the state where the industrial court plan had its inception With congress having-jurisdiction over the railroads, Representative Hoch confines the scheme he has submitted to railroad disputes, but it is admitted that enactment of such a law applying to railroad in-dustrial unrest and disputes would constitute an opening wedge for extension of regulatory power over industrial disputes of all kinds which could be classed as menacing to the public welfare.

Rail Peace Patchwork. Representative Hoch regards the ace in the railroad strike as a patched up strike which will mean patched up strike which will mean only temporary relief. It is congress' clear duty, he maintains, to seek a more permanent settlement and he urges his colleagues, especially on the interestate and foreign commerce missions to take active leadership in this effort.
