LEFTY SHROEDER, SENSATION OF THE BUSH LEAGUES, WHO WILL PITCH TODAY IN ONE OF THE GAMES OF DOUBLE-HEADER AT VAUGHN-STREET PARK.

Here are three views of Shroeder and his great left arm, which has moved down opposing butters in several no-ran no-hit games, many one-hit and any number of three, four and five-hit games this season. Shroeder is no mere busher. He made his mark in professional hall before the war, in which he served in France for 18 months, participating in five major engagements. On his return to baseball he was made the victim of one of the most unjust blacklists ever enforced by organized baseball, for a technical violation of rule. That is why his talents are hidden in the bush circuits now. At the left is a picture of Shroeder and his pitching swing—note the long arms. In the center is Lefty himself, portrait view, and below is the big left hand that wraps around a ball almost as if it were a marble. That long arm and that big hand and his lanky build give him the remarkable stuff that makes his delivery so unbittable.

To pitch to the green one must be bold indeed. To play so that one can always be sure of getting at least hole high, it is well to begin in practice to play for the top of the flag pin instead of the cup.

I have always maintained that the pitch shot is easier than the run up and I will say that the easiest shot in golf is one that looks the hardest to the layman.

Pitch Must Be Learned.

It is not easy to learn to play hole high if one is a timid player. Fear of running over the green spoils many beginners who never quite get over being green-shy. Too many duffers play to reach the green instead of playing to reach the pln. The professionals, it has always been said, play for the supeach time, thereby saving themselves a stroke or two on the green.

The reason most golfers are short is because they run the bail up instead of learning to pitch the bail up. I say "learning" because the pitch shot must be learned. Otherwise the player would make a sorry mess of it. Half the pitches would fall short in traps or just reach the edge of the green.
