W HILE the mind of the world is filled with wars, and while much of national leadership is concerned with emphasizing the spirit of national suspicion, distrust and hatred, a striking example of a ternational unification and religious phesiveness is shown in the enrollment of 21 nationalities, representing 13 religious faiths, in the daily vacation Bible school conducted during the summer months by the Pertland settlement center, the home missionary work of the Methodist Episcopal church of Portland.

intailigent leader, such as Mustapha Kemal Pasha, is going to burn down his own Turkish city at the time of occupying it? Is it not logical to assume that whatever incendiarism has occurred in the beautiful city of Smyrna must be laid to the door of those from whom it has just been wrested?

Nationality at Stake.

As to your charge of palliation on the ground "Greeks did it first." If you will read carefully my interview given to The Oregonian, you must appreciate that I was discussing facts, the fact being that the Turks were retaking their own city unwarrantedly wrested from them three years ago. There is no disputing this fact.

As to the charge in the last paragraph of the above quotation from your editorial. I am not aware that I ever stated that "the Turks as Mohammedans are fighting only for their rights and ideals of faith, but not to maintain political power." Of course, they are fighting to maintain their political power, which means their nationality. Is not this what every Christian nation does? Of course the Pashas are leading this movement, for Pasha is only another word for governor, general, leader—and who leads any political movement in any country but the leaders? However. I do maintain that this political objective is greatly sustained by the rights and ideals, which, naturally, is crystalized in their faith. Why not? Are they any different from their Christian brothers?

Is it not more germane to American thought and purpose to give opinions and facts of American observers who have been on the ground and in the field, than reports from propagandists of the old world, whose purpose is to gain America's moral support, and thence material assistance in the form of loans, while can be used to carry on imperialistic military campaigns, while we in America are seeking to reduce our own military overto reduce our own military over-head expenses and related taxation, and some of our own extremists are unwarrantedly reducing the officer personnel and appropriations of our own army? I prefer to take Admittal Bristol's report, published in your own columns, that the Turk in Smyrna is maintaining "extraordinary order," until we have a more reliable report, which, personally, I do not believe it is possible to obtain. Let me ask, how many of your own staff or the public who read your splendid paper have ever read an article or a statement by a Turk in exposition or defense of his position? If not why not? Let us be just and impersonal in these matters and alook at the rightness and principle of issues, and thereby enhance the force of our own position as a moral factor in the world and the greatest of mediating naand the greatest of mediating na-

Here and there along the fiver banks in various parts of the state, and especially abundant on Sauvie's island in the Columbia, grows a really attractive flower handicap-ped by the unpoetic name of Sneeze-wort, from its supposed effect upon the masal membrane, and damned in the eyes of the farmer from its prolificness.

To this group of stickights belongs a plant growing in much the same situation as the hislenium and closely resembling it oxospit that its leaves are opposite each other and the flowers scattered along the stem. This is the beggar's tick, better described by its scientific name of bidens, meaning two seeth, from the fact that its seed-like fruit have two or more awi-like teeth sometimes harbed by which they cling to whatever comes to the sunflower group and would be rather attractive were it not that one does not wish to encourage or aid such a persistent poet.

Another familiar member of this group is the familiar burdock. Its broad leaves might easily be mistaken for undernourished relubard, its spherical flower cluster has incompleuous flowers surrounded by rows of hooks which harden as they dry and cauch on to any passing object.

The curious teasis (Fig. 1), is siways an object of interest and is frequently gilded or colored and used for decorative purposes. As the illustration shows only a few of the flowers in cluster are in bloom at the same time. When past flowering the prongs and barbs with which it is so thickly beset become rigid, probably to help attach it to some object. Our wild teasis atraight prongs, but there is a species, native of other countries, which has been widely cultivated for use in the woolen industry. Another yellow flower of this sunflower sroup, especially common on the dried mud flats through the state, is the gum weed or grindella (Fig. 5). The intent of the heads exude a white sticky gum. This is sometimes incorrectly called tar weed, but the latter, although abundant everywhere, has a very inconspicuous flower cluster long past blooming it cannot be forgotten for it still loads the air with that pungent dark-green odor so neculiarly evident in the evening and at morning, and so distressing to the mucous membranes of sensitive nostrils. The gum weed has no such odor, and while our native species is of no value, it is closely related to one growing in the middle west which is used in pulmonary affections.
