For weeks on end I'd climb upon the daily morning trolley and say that keeping up a car is just expensive folly; I'd feel no lure of country hills with atmosphere untainted, but how I want to travel, now the car is being painted!

For evening after evening I'd sit around at home and never feel the least desire outside the house to roam; but now I want to go somewhere; my wife is restless, too; but while that car is in the shop there's naught on earth to do.

They've got a better lot of shows in town than e'er before; the country clubs hold out a charm, where once they were a bore; the county fair is in full swing; a trolley'd take us there, but who would hang upon a strap? No, you can have my share!

A month ago it seemed that we but seldom paid a visit; but now we're asked to go somewhere six nights a week. Why is it that friends who used to seem so near now all reside so far? It's just because, dad-burn the luck, we cannot use our car. We've often cussed the faithful friend and sworn that we would sell it. A car's a nuisance, anyway, to hear the owner tell it; but when it's gone: A month's enough to prove beyond a doubt your car is one possession that you just can't do without.

Professor W. S. Schoonbaker, the well-known amateur scientist and ukulele virtuoso, has just about completed the finishing touches on a perpetual motion machine, which, he conservatively declares, will revolutionize the industries of the universe. The professor got the idea, he says, from watching the operation of the meter on a taxicab.

When father announces the purchase of a new car: Son (in high school): "How fast will she travel?" Daughter (in seminary): "Is it one of those darling little coupes "

Son (in fourth grade): "How many cylinders, dad?"
Daughter (aged eight): "Has it a cute little seat in the back?"
Mother: "And what color did you choose, without asking me?"

When we had a near-education inflicted upon us in the little red school house, they taught us that the sum of the parts was equal to the whole. But that was before we had to purchase a new ring gear and a couple of wrist pins.

A guy we like is Jerry Powers; He drives the same make car as ours. And when we blow a tire, it's very Nice to borrow one off Jerry.

UNCLE EB, HE SAYS—
—Wealth don't bring happiness, boys. Take, finstance, the Giltrocks family who live up on the hill, and their feeble-minded son, who's attained the age of fifteen now without showing any signs of intelligence. But the old man has given the lad a new 20 horsepower car to drive around the streets, hoping it will provide the boy a bit of innocent pleasure.
