

DEVELOPMENT HELD BIG STATE PROBLEM

Chamber of Commerce Plans
Intensive Programme.

ALL OREGON INCLUDED

Comprehensive and Exhaustive
Scheme to Promote Products and Agriculture Adopted.

Everything comes from the soil, and the products of the first importance in planning state development. This is the foundation stone upon which the Portland Chamber of Commerce plans to build a greater Oregon, according to a statement made yesterday by O. W. Mielke, president of the Chamber. Prosperity of the man on the land is paramount to everything else, in bringing an agricultural state such as Oregon to the limits of its possibilities, Mr. Mielke said. With that object, an extensive programme of development, with the good of the whole commonwealth in view, has been planned by committees of the Chamber, and these plans now are being elaborated in detail.

Programme Is Comprehensive.
For a year and a half there has been consistent work under the direction of the organization heads, looking toward a work for a greater Oregon; one that would be unselfish in that efforts would not be directly alone to Portland's gain, but the essence of enlightened selfishness, because as the state prospers so will Portland advance, according to Mr. Mielke.

Plans have been sufficiently crystallized that a statement can be made of the scheme. It embraces land settlement, advantageous marketing arrangements for the products, encouragement of tourist travel, publicity of a favorable nature for Oregon and other aids to state building, all co-ordinated into an effective effort to bring about a well-rounded development.

State Development Vital.
"A state development work, essentially built upon the prosperity of the producer, now the land, yet embracing in its details a multitude of efforts that are calculated to advance state prosperity other wise, in a brief summary, the plan which the Chamber of Commerce is getting ready to offer," said Mr. Mielke. "We want land settlement work, done in the colonies, to hold that this is most effective where weaving in with the duty of directly aiding the settler now on the lands of our territory."
"We believe in the maximum tourist travel, because that leaves wealth and many good new residents in the state, but the publicity for and handling of tourists will have the largest value when this work is closely associated with other work to make the resident of the state receive more for his products."

Producers Must Prosper.
"In a nutshell, our plans, which are now emerging from committees, recognize that the producer of Oregon must be made more prosperous as the great background for increasing state population and wealth. No one line of effort can accomplish all that is needed. It must be a comprehensive programme. There must be co-ordination between all agencies, recognition of a few fundamental principles, honest help to the man on the land and a modern, progressive plan that will meet the intelligent, aggressive methods of other western communities that play no single string nor confine themselves to any single line of effort."

Methods Effective a Few Years Ago are Obsolete. A western state to keep within sight of its sisters must be up and moving, and modern lines every month of the year.

Preliminaries Are Studied.
"More than a year and a half ago we began planning a state development programme. It was found necessary to send careful students out for observation of similar work being done elsewhere. Months elapsed in gathering data, and some months in arranging and adapting them to Oregon conditions. We have studied marketing methods for the producer, land settlement and colonization, publicity, travel and recreation plans, etc. We felt that in opening a work of such transcendent moment to Oregon we must be careful and thorough."

Our committees are getting plans crystallized for final approval. In the last stages of the draft, these plans will segregate the work into three general divisions—marketing, land settlement and publicity.
"It has been borne in upon all of us, the further we have gone into state development work, that marketing Oregon products is the most vital duty in the programme, and must be kept foremost. Miscellaneous publicity will not accomplish this. Floods of travelers and tourists alone will not attain the end. There must be a deep-seated, thoroughly organized work to secure a better and more profitable market for the Oregon producer."
"This will require the services of the best minds of the state. It will not be accomplished in a week or a year, but will become possible as the thinking people of the state get down to fundamental modern principles of handling this problem. Land settlement work must be carried on constantly, especially after the condition of the present producer improves, but this duty of co-ordinating the marketing work for the present producer and bringing in new people is patent to every one who has gone into the subject carefully."
