

GARBAGE SYSTEM CITY CLUB TARGET

Municipal Collection Urged by Committee.

METHOD IN USE SCORED

Present Incinerator Declared to Be Inadequate for Disposal of Waste.

As a result of the insufficiency of the present incineration unit, the city is disposing of a large amount of garbage in a manner so unsightly and unsanitary that private citizens doing the same thing would be liable to prosecution for maintaining a nuisance, according to a report made to the City club last Friday by the committee on municipal wastes.

The investigation made by the City club is part of a study city officials believe should be made before use is made of a $200,000 bond issue passed in 1913, which is sufficient to finance construction of a new incinerator of sufficient capacity to care for the present needs of the city and to allow for the normal increase of the next few years.

Members of the City club committee are Arthur Underhill, chairman; A. A. Knowlton, L. A. Liljequist, O. L. Le Fever and W. G. Purcell.

The report deals with present methods of garbage collection and disposal in Portland. In summarizing the results of the investigation the committee recommends municipal collection as more efficient than collection by licensed scavengers or by contract.

"Greater incinerator capacity must be provided before the summer of 1923," the report stated. "The present incinerator is of an early type, but is thoroughly sanitary and reasonably economical in operation. It is, however, possible that the most economical procedure would be to replace the present furnaces with those of a more recent type, which would produce steam as a by-product."

Dumps Are Unsatisfactory. "The conditions at the garbage dumps in the city are far from satisfactory. Both at the incinerator dump and the Marquam-gate dump the committee found unsanitary and otherwise objectionable conditions which should be remedied. Vigorous measures should be taken to combat insect pests at all dumps."

"The whole problem as to technical details of collection should be given careful attention as the most possible date for this study the city should employ a competent sanitary engineer, since the work to be done is of a highly-specialized nature."

REJUVENATED EDNA WALLACE HOPPER ONLY 48 YEARS OLD

John F. Logan, Prominent Attorney of Portland, Produces Proof That Wrinkless Actress Is Spoofing About Being 62.

BY LEONE CASS BAER.

WHENEVER one of us girls sets her age back a few years it is only the law of retribution working out when Uncle Wilbur gets garrulous and tells our exact age to a day, or grandma trots out the family Bible and reveals the damning truth, dates and details on the flyleaf. There is always some kindly man cousin in every girl's life who figures her age out for her by digging out autograph albums or old school books with "To Addie, on her tenth birthday." All we have to do then is count back the intervening years.

Edna Wallace Hopper, who is 48, but doesn't look it.

The old joke still holds good that when their ages are mentioned all day but that women take off several years. Actresses as a class go steadily backward with each year until we look for some of them to be announcing their own birth or see them with teething rings and rattles.

Curiously enough Sarah Bernhardt never has lied about her age and boasts of her 76-some years of work and happiness. David Warfield tells his age; so does Mrs. Fiske; so does William H. Crane and Blanche Bates and a dozen others whose lives record success and happiness. Why? Because their ages are matters of public record and he who runs may read them.

Now, then, having established and admitted that all women lie about their ages if they think they can get away with it until some 20-year-old paragraph rises up to smite them, we witness the even more curious fact of a woman who says she is 15 years older than her actual and recorded 48 years.

Edna Wallace Hopper, who claims to be 62 years old, astonishes all the grandmas and elderly spinsters with her kittenish moods and baby skin, is only 48, and that is comparatively youthful nowadays. There's many a matron of 60 in Portland whose skin is younger than Miss Hopper's and whose eyes are as sparkling and whose figures are as plump and girlish as that of the petite Edna.

When Edna Wallace Hopper came to see us with her story of plastic surgery that had rejuvenated a face that had done service for 62 years, naturally we were all impressed, for 62 years would make wear and tear on the face. Edna was admittedly a flapper for 62. So we discussed and opined and remarked on plastic surgery and a few nice old grandmas were seriously considering mortgaging the car and running down to Los Angeles or to New York to be de-wrinkled and rejuvenated.

"Along comes the inevitable Uncle Wilbur with a mania for statistics, the original laddie-buck with the autograph album full of dates and the memory-bound, is John F. Logan, attorney, whose hobby is theatrics.

"Edna Wallace Hopper is not 62 years old," said Mr. Logan when the flapper actress was here at a local motion-picture theater. "Somewhere I've got a book that tells her exact age and history. If I can find it I'll tell you."

"Either day Mr. Logan found the book. It is a part of his library, one of a dozen volumes by Lewis C. Strang devoted to people of the theater and the musical world. This particular volume is called 'Prime Donnas and Soubrettes' and devotes a chapter each to some 30 or more stars of earlier days, among them Lillian Russell, Alice Nielsen, Fay Templeton, Edna May, Jessie Bartlett Davis, Della Fox, Camille D'Ar-

Vachel Lindsay, Poet, Is Modern Troubadour.

Fame Is Won by Exchanging Verse for Hospitality.

VACHEL LINDSAY, the American poet, who will open the series of literary programmes to be offered this season by the Portland Library association with his lecture at the Labor temple auditorium Friday night, is declared to be the modern representative of the troubadour and minnesinger.

His first vagabond journey started at the suggestion of a friend, who told him he would have to do something out of the ordinary if he were ever to claim recognition from the editors who were breaking his heart with refusals while he stayed in New York and offered to convey a verse of the kind which established writers furnished. So he set out in yellow corduroy trousers, sombrero and flaming tie, and offered to camp anywhere or to sleep in any hospital. Everywhere he studied human motives and elemental passions, and added to a store of facts illustrating principles of conduct which he might weave into his verses. His verbal rendering of his writings led him to an appreciation of the days of the minnesingers. Indeed, he is the modern troubadour.

A visit to London at the close of the world war brought an appreciative comment which aroused American critics to the fact that Mr. Lindsay most truly expresses American life and in the most perfect familiarity with all living writers.

Mr. Lindsay will read and chant his poems and hypnotize his audience into chanting the refrains with him.

Scott & Downe, Bloomfield, N. J. 22-23

Edna Wallace Hopper, sou-brette, Mr. Strang writes: "Edna Wallace was born in San Francisco and was educated at the Van Ness seminary there. It was during the summer of 1911, when she was a matron of 50 in Portland going on the stage ever entered her head. Mr. Reed met Miss Wallace at a reception while he was playing in San Francisco in 1911. She was then not far from 17 years old. Impressed with her vivacity, he laughingly offered her a position in his company and, behold, the mischief was done. She accepted quickly; and although her parents did not approve of the plan in the least, she journeyed east during the summer and in August made her appearance at the Boston museum with Mr. Reed as Mable Douglass in 'The Club Friend.' This was produced in 1911-12.

"Two weeks later she acted in the same play at the Star theater in New York, where six weeks later she was given the leading ingenue role in 'Lend Me Your Wife.' She attracted the attention of Charles Frohman and was engaged by him, appearing successfully as Luby in 'Chums,' Margery in 'Men and Women' and as Wilbur's Ann, the holterouser frontier maiden in 'The Girl I Left Behind Me.'

"It was while she was acting in this play in June, 1913, that she was married to De Wolf Hopper, the much more Strang tells about the little soubrette, dwelling on her petite prettiness and her vivaciousness, her dimples and her spontaneous expression of natural blitheness.

"You can figure it out for yourself," said Mr. Logan. "She was 17 years old in 1911. Subtract 1911 from 1922 and you'll have 11. Add 17 to 11 and you have 28, and that is Miss Hopper's age.

"And 48 years," Mr. Logan emphatically, "is young, I'm telling you."

So that's that.

LOANS TO HUBBY GONE

WIFE SAYS SHE MADE ADVANCES OF $2500.

Woman Married in Reno Says Mate Continually Asked for Money to Drill Oil Wells.

"Married in Reno and divorced in Portland"—that is the way the story will read if some judge of the circuit court grants the decree sought by Josie K. from Charles E. Overton.

If Mrs. Overton's version of her husband's actions and pretensions tally with the facts, Charlie treated her shamefully. By way of illustration, she says he made away with $2500 lent to him during the brief period of their married life. Their marriage was solemnized in Reno, Nev., on January 25. They came to Portland and on February 20 Charlie left for California, she says she has never seen him nor any of the various sums of money she lent him since that time.

Emphasizing the disappointment Mrs. Overton must feel is the fact that during the courtship Overton represented himself as a man of wealth, with large interests in California oil fields. His oil income amounted to just $2800 a month, he told her.

No sooner were they married than the husband needed money for the drilling of more oil wells. She gave it to him. Then when he left her in California and went to California cities he constantly found need for more money. All his letters called for further advances. Mrs. Overton states. Subsequently he started for Chicago and the last letters received from him, written en route, asked for further "loans." Interspersed with the letters were telegrams, always asking for money and generally suggesting that it be telegraphed in care of the telegraph company. He never gave any addresses, she says.

As one bit of shameful treatment, the complainant states, Charlie stopped at California hotels where she was known and had many of his hotel bills charged to her. As the crowning climax of his meanness it is alleged that Overton told mutual friends that the plaintiff had him under the influence of liquor when he married her.

FIRE LOSS IS $3,000,000

Washington Timber Damage in 1922 Greatest in History.

Forest fires for the last season have cost the state of Washington and private timber concerns $3,000,000, according to a report from the Washington state forester, issued through the forest service office of this city. This figure covers, in addition to destruction of timber, losses to fire patrol associations, railroads and loggers, and constitutes the highest loss sustained during a single season. The report shows $1,746,167 of timber destroyed, over $100,000 in incidental losses as a result of fire-fighting expenditure.

An increase of 10 to 15 per cent in fires of incendiary and miscellaneous origin and fires caused by lightning was noted, while fires due to lumbering operations and campers decreased about 20 per cent.

A report of a similar nature will be issued by the Oregon state forester next month.

Advertisement for Dr. E. G. Ausplund, Mgr. The ad is titled 'Prejudice Prevents Thousands From Saving Money in Dentistry'. It argues that 'Some say a dentist should not advertise. Others say I should not set a price. Stores advertise, and they advertise prices. Experience will prove to you that no office is cleaner or better equipped. As to my prices being advertised, I can say that it is either due to poor business systems, or it is impossible for others to meet my prices. Now those who do not advertise prices have no better office nor finer dentists—generally not as good—so why pay more than I charge? INVESTIGATION WILL PROVE SOME FACTS: Investigation will prove I am as well prepared as any dentist in the state to properly care for your teeth. Having proved these qualities, to listen to the propaganda of the dark ages is costing you money.'
