SULLIVAN EYES ISSUES

Pennsylvanian Is Declared Able to See Cleavage and Take Position on Humane Side.

(Copyrighted by New York Evening Post. Published by Arrangement.) BY MARK SULLIVAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 2.—(Special)—All nomination of the republican presidential nomination for 1924 begins with President Harding. A good many say that it ends with him also. That, however, does not necessarily follow. The most experienced politicians will tell you that the rule which calls upon a party in power to nominate the president in office for a second term cannot be broken. In point of fact, however, this rule has been broken in the past and will be broken in the future more than it has in the past.

The politicians who say and believe that for good or bad the republican party must nominate its present president in 1924, are thinking in terms of the days before the direct primary. It was about 1912 when the presidential primary began to be adopted generally. Before that time, when presidential nomination were almost entirely within the will of the party leaders, it was quite true, as the politicians say, that the rule was practically universal to nominate a present incumbent in office. To do otherwise was regarded almost as a slight upon the president. It was regarded as the equivalent of saying that the president has not been a success.

Good Fellowship Is Factor

The theory underlying this old rule of giving a renomination to a president in office includes the idea that human good-fellowship which is characteristic of all successful political leaders, and which leads them to want to do what they would call "the decent thing" by a president in office. But the theory also includes a practical consideration. To refuse to give a renomination to a president in office involves, in effect, an admission that his administration has not been very satisfactory. For a party to give a renomination to a president in office to nominate a different man is in effect, saying to the public: "We ask you to keep our party in power, although we are not our failure to renominate our present president that we do not endorse him, but rather appoint a successor." This is so weak a position that it is almost an invitation to failure at the general election.

Primaries to Be Felt

To put it briefly, although the political leaders generally will undoubtedly feel like renominating Harding, and will feel that to do otherwise is dangerous, nevertheless they will be obliged to remember that nominations are now controlled by the presidential primaries and that Harding must stand up to the working-out of the primaries the same as anybody else who may want the nomination. If, when 1924 comes, there is a general demand for some other man, subject to the vicissitudes of political strategy and political accidents, presumably will win the presidential primaries.

MOSCOW PEACE MEET ON

Russia Seeks Better Relations With Neighbor States.

MOSCOW, Dec. 2.—(By the Associated Press).—A disarmament conference, which officials believe will be the most important meeting ever held for the purpose of bettering the relations with Russia and the neighboring states, opened here today. The big problem of organized labor today is identical with that of organized capital and that is, how to avoid the abuse of great power. And it may be well remembered that a despotism of the many may be as detested as the despotism of the individual.

TWO OFFICERS PURSUED

Seizure of Offending Deputies on Steamer Ordered.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—The police tug Manhattan tonight was ordered to pursue the steamship Assyria and take from her, "using force if necessary," two deputy sheriffs. When the ship sailed these deputies, it is said, were attempting to remove 4000 cases of Scotch whisky from a cargo of 11,500 cases, ordered deposited by the federal prohibition department.

LABOR BOARD CHIEF SCORES UNION DRIVE

Men Aiming at Government Ownership, Charge.

PROPAGANDA IS CITED

Magazines Published by Organizations Declared Full of Insidious Articles.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—(By the Associated Press).—Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the United States railroad labor board, in a speech before the Illinois Bar association here tonight, charged that many railway union leaders were waging warfare against the roads with the purpose of destroying the industry and forwarding a political campaign for government ownership.

"A large portion of the union magazines which pass over my desk contain bitter attacks on the roads, their managements and their policies," he said. "These criticisms are not confined to matter of direct controversy between the roads and the employees, but they cover every ground of attack that might be made by those outside of railroad employment."

"Nothing is left unsaid that seems to be calculated to stir up hatred among the employees and distrust and hostility among the people."

Drive in Roads Charged

In their efforts to further government ownership, employees are opposed to the transportation act and the railroad labor board, he said, because they feel that the successful adjustment of wages and working conditions and the general but certain reduction of freight rates under that act will conduce to the postponement or prevention of government ownership. He continued: "In the political programme of the labor leaders, two definite demands are made: First, that the legislative powers exercised by the courts in connection with strikes be withdrawn or greatly limited. Second, that the constitution be so amended that congress can set aside the decisions of the federal courts which pronounce an act of congress unconstitutional."

Citizenship Is Impaired

"When a man becomes thoroughly saturated with distrust of the courts, he is no longer a good American citizen. His mind is befogged with dark suspicions and he nurses a fanatical grievance against his government. He is converted into a fit instrument of disloyalty and treason. The man who persistently labors to destroy the faith of the people in the courts, whether he is a bomb-throwing anarchist or a United States congressman, is guilty of the most insidious treachery to the republic."

Despotism Is Feared

"On any fine November morning, a concatenation of annoyances might generate the politic bacterium of popular stomach that would set up the grouch which would kick over the constitution."

If You Want Genuine Values in Christmas Jewelry Gifts
You'll Find Them at Feldenheimer's

The Name on the Gift Box Makes a World of Difference to People Who Know and Care.

Many people are under the impression that because the quality of merchandise at this store is superior, prices are necessarily high.

It will be found upon investigation that prices here are in exact proportion to merit and nothing else. Many articles obtainable here are priced much lower, in proportion to their quality, than the ordinary merchandise sold elsewhere.

Feldenheimer jewelry and silverware make an irresistible appeal to those who know real values and are not content with anything but the best, for the best is always the cheapest, always in correct taste, and the recipient realizes that pure sentiment, the real spirit of giving, prompts the selection.

Many inexpensive articles from $1 up can be purchased here.

LAWS GO INTO EFFECT
Kelso-Kalama Squabble Will Not Hold Up Approved Measures.
OLYMPIA, Wash., Dec. 2.—(Special)—Delaying the official casting of election returns from Cowlitz county by court injunction issued in the Kelso-Kalama county seat squabble, will not interfere with the taking effect of various measures approved by the voters at the general election, Attorney-General Thompson said today. The state constitution provides that measures approved by the voters become effective 30 days after election, and while the lack of returns from Cowlitz county may delay official certification of the adoption of the measures to the governor, thereby delaying his proclamations, such steps are only statutory for carrying out the constitutional provision and approved measures will become effective December 9, whether proclaimed by the governor or not.

Mid-Columbia Has Sunshine.
HOOD RIVER, Or., Dec. 2.—(Special)—Springlike weather struck the mid-Columbia today. Sunshine of the morning was followed by heavy rains in the afternoon and tonight chinooks were reported on the higher points and around the base of Mount Hood and it was anticipated that Hood River would reach a flood stage before morning if melting of the accumulation of snow that fell in heavy volume in the high and forested last week continues throughout the night.
