Astoria returned to their homes yes-terday, some on the gasoline pumper which the A. G. Long company sent to the stricken city and others ou railway trains. All agreed that the Astoria blaze, from the fireman's point of view, was one of the worst conflagrations in the history of the northwest. The streeds, built on pilling, simply acted as flues for the fire, and the force was absolutely unable to cope with the situation. "The Astoria firemen put up a
