THURSDAY, OCT. 31, 1895.

The American eagle will scream when necessity requires, but it is a bird that makes but little noise for nothing.

The possibilities of war in Europe, and trouble between England and the U. S. are as nothing compared to the anxiety of the public for the future of the San Francisco dailies.

Snow has fallen in the eastern states in several localities and the people are preparing for a very cold winter.

The Portland exposition has been visited by larger crowds this year than ever before.

When farmers realize the importance of getting out of debt and keeping that way, prosperity will be something tangible.

A rattling war across the pond would send up the prices of products in a manner highly gratifying to American producers.

The probabilities of a war with England are not as strong as some would be led to imagine.

The weakness of human nature are manifold, but the same degree of charity should be exercised toward your erring companion that you would desire, should you be the erring one.

The ARGUS is with its contemporary on the preservation of the Louvre Doctrine, in the strictest sense.

Commissioner Lochren, of the Pension Bureau, has published the annual report and it tells some interesting facts.

Commissioner Lochren. The Commissioner advises that clerks who have grown disabled in bureau service be also subjects for pension.

The man whose blood will not quicken when he thinks of what soldiery has sometimes undergone and who does not believe a nation should generously pay for the perpetuation of its principles of liberty, is not a worthy citizen.

Election for state officials and legislators occur next Tuesday in several states.

Senator Hill has been out in Ohio, taking the stump for Campbell, and as the local issues are predominant, he may be able to defeat Bushnell.

Each of the great powers of Europe has a better equipped navy than the United States.

Corporal punishment is all right in its place, and so is Sheol.

People who look upon Japan as an uncultured country will be surprised when they know that in 1880, but only 9 per cent of its population could not read.
