DOLPHIN NOT DEAD.

The political atmosphere is very light and transparent, as yet, to the casual observer, but there is brewing in the republican ranks, a storm of no mean magnitude.

To insure this majority, they will not, it is said, put up for election or defeat any of the members of the legislative body, but nominate practically new men, dress up the old pledges in holiday array, make new affirmations of reform and sail into the campaign.

The republicans contend their meeting at Portland was not to outline a policy nor pass judgment upon what the party had done, or was to do.

The Argus is not inclined to grieve because Cogswell bolted—neither is it surprised. That $2000 attorney fee of his which he pushed through a republican legislature last winter, clearly showed to even verdant newspaper men, that the doughty Southern Oregon statesman was no stranger to republican sentiment.

The Independent says the songs sung by the Woodburn Quintette had no point, except coarse profanity. The Independent could have said worse than that and still confined itself to the truth.

Parliament has convened in London, and a busy session it will be. If the two houses succeed in unravelling the kinks put in the British Lion's tail, they will have done well.

If the present Congress would express a little more solicitude for this nation and a little less for foreign subject matters, it would be better for all concerned.

The "thirty" seem all to appreciate those little jokes perpetrated upon them by their fellow republican leaguers. Which is as was expected.

What is the matter with a southern man to head the national democratic ticket? How would Morgan do for the next president?
