Moore, of Greenville, James H., Mrs. Henry Carstens, and Mrs. Wort Bacon. This wife died in 1891 and in 1893 he married Mrs. Sarah Hoard, who survives him. Friday last Mose Hirschey was tried before Justice Smith and a jury on a charge of having assaulted J. N. Gardner, on or about August 20th of the present year. Gardner's evidence was corroborated by that of his little boy, who was with him at the time, but something or other was in the way of conviction, as the jury brought in a verdict of disagreement. Trouble first began between Hirschey and Gardner over a cayuse which the former bought at Linton, and which Gardner claims is his, and was stolen from Eastern Oregon, and sold to the cannery. Hirschey bought the horse home and placed it in Gardner's pasture. Gardner took the horse to his barn, tied it up, and about ten o'clock that night Moses went over and took the coatin away. So the trouble brewed, until, Gardner says, Moses tried to pull him out of his buggy, as he was passing along by Hirschey's place, one day. The horse matter is not yet settled.

Chicken thieves are again making their rounds in the farm sections. One night last week they visited the Verboort neighborhood, where they were obliged to shoot Kemper's dog to keep from being bitten. They got no poultry. They then went to Heesacker's, where they stole 35 of the feathered tribe. Heesacker took a shot at them but they got away with the spoils. They also visited the farm of A. Krieger, and it is said they got away with 35 or 40 chickens. A funeral will stop this sort of work.

Miss Minnie Spaulding, a grand daughter of County Treasurer, Cady, has been sketching some of our oldest buildings for the North west Historical Society. She has made drawings of the old court house, now a Main street business building, and built in 1854; the Wilcox building, on the Connel place east of town, built in 1851, and the Jackson building, east of Dr. Tamiesie's, built in the early sixties. Miss Spaulding is turning out some very clever work. She will again visit Hillsboro to finish up her work.

These representative specimens are used in teaching students the points of merit and how to judge animals. —Oregon Agriculturist.

HORSE AND BUGGY STOLEN SUNDAY NIGHT

Taken From The Shed Behind The Grange Store.

PROPERTY FOUND IN PORTLAND.

House of Evan P. Hughes Entered by Burglars.

Two robberies were committed Sunday evening, while services were being held in the Congregational church, in this city.

J. A. Ruble, who lives between this city and Cornelius, on the old Kenyon Crandall place, tethered horse and buggy in the Grange shed, and when he returned, after services in the Congregational church, the conveyance was missing. The officers were at once notified, but no trace could be found of the absent horse. The next morning, it was learned that, at the time of services, some one had entered the house of Rev. Evan P. Hughes, the Congregational minister, and stolen a revolver and some jewelry belonging to his wife. It is thought the same party committed both robberies.

Portland officers were notified and the horse and buggy found, but the man who had helped himself had vamoosed for more congenial climes. It is said that the officers were with the man when he was in possession of the horse and buggy, but that he lied so successfully that no arrest was made, he alleging that he was a farmer from some vague locality. Mr. Ruble returned with his rig Monday night.

J. N. Gardner has begun proceedings to determine whether he or Moses Hirschey is the owner of the horse the latter recently bought at Linton. Judge Smith's court will try the case. The case has not yet been set for trial, as the Attorneys are sparring in the preliminaries. This is the horse which led up to the assault and battery case which caused a trial and a subsequent jury disagreement. This case will be tried again, and the cayuse will be a noted equine before the law gets through grinding. Gardner says there can be no mistake as to the ownership of the horse, while Hirschey isn't going to relinquish until he must.

An interview in the evening Telegram quotes the Independent editor as against the Nicaragua Canal. It will be rembered that the Independent was very lately a strong advocate of the canal, but its editor seems to have taken a change of mind. It would be interesting to know whether or not Representative Tongue has changed his opinion, also. The canal must have a good effect on Liverpool freight rates on wheat shipments, and only other considerations can make a westerner go against the canal.

E. G. Fanning, a Portland safe combination expert was out Monday and tried the whole day to open the safe which had been used by Geo. R Bagley. Cadwell.

The Oregonian of Tuesday tells of a Washington county family of six or seven children in a state of destitution. The exact location, and name, are not given. As a matter of fact this county has always been very liberal in helping the destitute, and it is strange the local authorities have not heard from this case.
