THE RESULT.

McKinley has been re elected. THE ARGUS does not think that it has been a matter of indorsement of the wrongs of the administration. Neither does it think that the imperial policy has the support of the country at large. The whole occasion of the Bryan defeat can be laid at the door of the ghost of the past. There were thousands of voters who remembered only the depression concurrent with the Cleveland administration and feared its repetition in the success of Bryan. This fear obtained with the multitude more than the fear of bimetallism. It was the fear that found lodgment in the the rank and file of voters everywhere—they believed the manufacturers would "ruin" the country by shutting down—and they voted for McKinley. So we shall continue with a trust-ridden government. The best that can be hoped is that we shall have less scandal in national affairs the next four years than we have had the past four. We will now "put up" for the benefit of the trusts and corporations and in four years their hold will be so strong that a terrific effort will be required to oust them from the control of our country.

UNMITIGATED GALL.

For unmitigated gall, commend us to Governor Geer, the chief executive of the State of Oregon. A political mischance; a man who has not, although rich with opportunity, made a success at farming in one of the most fertile sections of the state; a compromise between the two warring factions of a party; elevated to the highest office within the gift of the state; accused by a lifelong republican, Hi Plummer with having sold an office even before he was elected—this man Geer, with an effrontery that has no equal in the many scandals of the commonwealth, imposes himself upon the good people of Oregon, in an endeavor to teach them principles! The people of Oregon are familiar with his history—with the possible exception of those residing in Multnomah County, where there are no papers to tell of the political immorality of what should be a model officer. To do as Governor Geer has done requires gall—and gall he has. But a mountebank is never lacking in that requisite.

A DANGEROUS POWER.

It is within the power of the great banking and corporate institutions to frighten timid people with their threats of panic. Until this agency shall be taught a lesson we may expect bad administrations in our national government. There were this time thousands of voters who feared to cast a vote against Mr. McKinley on this score alone. To this fear that a panic would be produced, more than to any other thing, is due the landslide. Some day the American people must either divorce these institutions from politics or divorce themselves from the idea of a government of the people. We are constrained to believe that the former divorcement will obtain, rather than the latter, but we are already on the shoals of the latter. The old and antiquated doctrine that riches extreme must rule, must go down, as it is not germane to democratic institutions. The longer it is tolerated the harder it will be to [illegible]. The history of the trusts in the last four years is an object lesson that must appeal to all conservative, and inflame all radical elements. This danger is a menace to our liberties. The club of fear is [illegible] to be successfully held over the head of an American

A PROPER DIVORCEMENT.

If the Democratic National organization never effects a victory until it is on the side of the trusts and corporations and until it gets aid from them financially, THE ARGUS sincerely hopes it will never again elect a president. When Grover Cleveland was president he was hand in glove with these forces. Harrison was not to be elected because he believed, to a certain extent, in the quantitative theory of money. The big money interests were paramount to the manufacturing interests and for once these interests parted company. Grover was made the scapegoat, and, from all appearances, he enjoyed it. He has never lost his serenity nor time to go fishing.

If these interests are to govern, and prescribe government, let not the party that seeks to make a government of and for the people have aught to do with them. There will come a time when the history of the last democratic administration will not hang like a cloud over the new democracy—and that time may not be over four years. It would not be surprising if the next campaign witnessed a landslide for the people who are producing.

A CRYING NEED.

The crying need of Oregon is a daily paper in Portland, the state's chief city. There is but one journal of state circulation and it exercises too much power and exercises that too continously, for the best interests of the Oregon portion of the Northwest. It has been, and always will be, an organ and an organ is never of benefit to the body politic. There will be a paper there some day. There are two ways that a paper can be established there. Either a paper must have unlimited means back of it, or else it must be started by some one who has the nerve and plenty of stick-to-itiveness to start on a small scale. An opposition paper would at once receive a hearty support in that city and throughout the state. In the past Portland has only witnessed the starting of journals by some political wing. Such journals can not be expected to live. A good live daily paper, even were it short on telegraphic matter, would receive a welcome in this field if due notice and consideration were given to local, municipal and state affairs. Some day it will come.

PLEASED AT THE RESULT.

English newspapers are candid—those who support the imperial side of the question—and express great satisfaction over the result of the American election. The Daily Telegraph says:

"Englishmen have never had, since Lincoln's time, a deeper interest in the issue of a presidential contest."

It then compares Mr. Bryan with Gladstone, declaring the former's policy of humanitarian intentions would entail an American Majuba. It declares that "England's deepest hopes are pledged for McKinley's apparently assured success."

This shows that England appreciates the fact that America is following the imperial channel.

It begins to look as though we shall sell more hay to Messrs. Albers & Schneider and Haines & Shipley.

The Sultan of Sulu will smile when he sees the election returns from the Home Government. And well he might.

Cornelius precinct went through the mill, but the majority for Bryan was not strong enough to turn the state.

"For whom the Lord loveth he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth."—Proverbs 12-111.

No doubt Mr. J. Bull is very well pleased with the vote of the American colonies. Why shouldn't he be well pleased?

It's nasty medicine to swallow, but it must be taken, and as long as it tastes the same, a big dose is no worse than a small one.

The constitution has suffered a defeat. But as it has been badly trampled in the last two years, what but a poor fight could it put up?

Cornelius was the banner Bryan precinct in Washington county, and we are not sure but in the state. We are too sick to look over the returns at present, so will give Cornelius right of way.

The Lord caused the children of Israel to wander in the wilderness for forty years—that is right, isn't it?—and so, friends, don't take it too hard. And our friends of the opposition, don't lay it on too hard, for remember there is a hereafter.

Democrats and populists in this county now know how Mr. Cornelius felt last June. But like Capt. Ordway, of mid-road fame, they can start out for the next campaign. Time heals all wounds and the flag still floats over the straw stack palace of the Sultan of Sulu.

We must take off our hats to Mr. Marcus Hanna, whether we have any use for him or not. But it isn't very likely that it bothers the gentleman from Ohio. He is the hero of the hour. He is the man who drummed General Apathy out of camp and put him on the firing line.

This is the supreme hour of the trusts and the corporations. But all things must come to an end. There will come a time when the rank and file of republican voters will turn against the money power with the wrath of a whirlwind—for the combinations of capital are not in politics for their health.

A Bryanite went to bed on the night of the election after he had heard the adverse returns. It was late when he retired and he dreamed that South Carolina had gone for McKinley. The nightmare so thoroughly frightened him that he arose and built a fire and slept no more. If such a dream would not murder sleep, what would?

We are very liable to have some startling developments in China. If England really has eyes covetous on the Mongolian she will soon have the American administration with her in a chase for territory.

LATEST advices indicate that Bryan has carried his home state and Kentucky, although the vote is very close. Both sides claim victory in each of these states, but the Courier-Journal claims Bryan has carried Kentucky, while the Bryan people of Nebraska claim the state is in the Bryan column without a doubt.

Now that the election is over the Oregon public will be engrossed with the coming senatorial election. H. W. Corbett is out after the "toga" and it is stated that he is going after the office with all the vigor of a man who wants something and is bound to have it. The old gentleman is likely to be disappointed in his ambition.

THE Oregonian of this morning comes out with the following bon mot, advocating the candidacy of the senate—funny is it not?—of the United States: "Hon. John McCraken is elected to the legislature from Multnomah county by a majority of 3500. This is a close representation of the strength of Mr. Corbett's candidacy for the senate. It may serve to show the republicans of the state, which is the truth, that the defeat of the republican legislative ticket in Oregon in June was due to antagonism, not to Mr. Corbett, but to others."

A Woman's Record.

A record to be proud of is that of Amelia E. Barr, who has been the mother of fourteen children, has written thirty-two books, prepared a professor for Princeton Coll ge and at three score years of age is a superb picture of vitality—as fresh and sweet of heart as a young girl. —Ex.
