willome the American arms with the understanding that they were to be part and parcel of this government. The infamous tariff bill we imposed upon them was but at harbinger of what we will do to them when our public consciences shall become a triffe more hardened. It is well to remember that the bill which became a law was only out from the original intentions because there were those in the republican party who yet were swayed by conscience. The ablest journals in the party were arrayed against the original measure, and instead of skinning them outright, we only divested them of 15 per cent of their cutiele. The distrust of the administration by the Filliphous and the Cubans, therefore, is owell founded that one is candid to admit that "divillized" people, and we contracted that they have been given by the powers that be.
