FIGHT FOR EQUALITY.

The struggle between the employers and employees now pending in the form of strikes is but the natural result of economic conditions. The great corporations have pursued a policy of controlling legislation for their profit, and at every turn have turned down the demands of laborers. Wages have only been kept up by constant vigilance upon the part of labor unions, and wherever a union could be crushed the big corporations have never spared life. The corporations enjoy subsidy from tariff legislation where tariff legislation can possibly benefit. They have organized for years and their organization is to-day more complete than it has ever been in industrial history. Labor has but one defense against this, and that is in organization. The big strikes, while ruinous to labor, will not work much of a hardship on the big fellows. In most cases, the firms and trusts have watched for labor troubles, and have stock ahead. By the first of the year we shall know which is the stronger, and which the most entitled to public sympathy, the corporations, or the labor which makes the plants of the corporations worth something. It is a fight for equality and justice. It now looks favorable for the labor unions. Some of the big papers generally having but little to say in favor of labor unions, like the Oregonian, now are supporting them. This, however, is but temporary, and should the corporations win, it will be easy for them to switch back. If this disturbance keeps up there will be but one remedy for it—the public ownership of the manufacture of necessities.

YEA, CRUEL!

Was the battle of Santiago lost that all this controversy, and inquiry and discussion should result from it? Were not all the Spanish vessels annihilated, and all the Spanish sailors slain or taken prisoner? Did the American people expect anything that they did not get?

The battle of Santiago was fought and won for us. In the language of Admiral Schley, it was probable that "Every man in the action did the best he could." Every American marine and officer stood boldly and bravely to his duty, and the net result was a naval triumph that will shine resplendent throughout the coming ages. The brave men who participated in the battle served their country gallantly and well and each and all are heroes.

Why then, seek to disparage the gallant efforts of either or any of them? Why, in the name of common decency and honorable gratitude, can we not accept that splendid triumph with expressions of our country's thankfulness, and give to each intrepid sailor, not taunts, but generous praise for his effort? Why write histories and in them attempt to rob men of the honorable name and fame they have won, serving their country? Is it not wrong, is it not cruel, is it not ghouliah to continue this heartless persecution of one or any of our gallant sailors?—Corvallis Times.

This water and light proposition is settled. Mr. Gates, who has had business relations with the city for ten years, severs his connection with Hillsboro, and leaves a large circle of friends. One has always known where to find him, and that he has lived up to his contract goes without saying. It has not been a very paying investment for him, and yet he has not suffered loss. While here he has been honored by representing the county in the Legislature, and that he did the wishes of the majority of his constituents while there is history. He is heavily interested in the Northwest, and wherever he goes he will have the well wishes of a host of Hillsboro friends.

WHILE we feel a profound sorrow when death comes even to the aged—for death at all times is sad—it is when death comes to the young in life that we feel the most poignant grief. More especially is this grief marked when the person smitten is one of lovable character, and one who has always held the esteem of the entire community. The late Mrs. Smith, of this city, was a woman whose death was a genuine occasion for sorrow. Young, beloved by all who came in touch with her gentle and gracious character, hers was a life that might well have been spared to the community in which her being was an ornament and guiding star to all our womanhood.

RESULT OF WARM WEATHER.

HILLSBORO, Aug. 8, 1901. EDITOR ARGUS.—Last year your humble correspondent ventured to write a protest against the pestiferous thistle that lines the sidewalks of our town and the communication was, of course, suppressed by some Caledonian on the force perhaps. However, Mr. Editor, the subject is still in the game, and all you have to do to find it out is to catch a few high balls where such things are kept, and take a walk around town and they will keep you from going to sleep on your best. It was hoped that Bradford's burro would work a few of them off, but he don't seem to have the penchant for thistles that the breed is supposed to have. As the thistle is not fatal to human life, and acts only as a counter-irritant when applied, you are not interested; but there is another thing that is far more dangerous, namely, the microbe hatcheries which are running on Main street where the mains or something else is leaking. Wouldn't it be well for the city council to have these hatcheries examined so as to find out and classify the different breeds of microbes so that the citizen could intelligently protect himself against them by the latest scientific methods? And, too, microbes might be imported that would prey on the spawn of those that are here and neutralize their evil effects. And, again, there might be useful and necessary microbes breeding there which prey on the microbes brought from other places so that it would be folly to cut them off by mending the mains. Hoping you enjoyed your outing on the beach of the Tualatin river, I remain, Yours truly, IGNOTUS.

THE ARGUS is not answerable for thistles, Bradford's jackass, or the mains and microbes. The above communication is referred to our worthy marshal for investigation and report.—Ed.

It is not an experimental medicine, but has stood the test of years, giving satisfaction in every case, which its rapidly increasing sale every year confirms. Two million bottles sold annually.
