PICTURES THAT POINT.

Trick of "Foreshortening" to Give Moving Effect to Drawings.

"With the exception of making the eyes of a portrait follow you 'round,' there is no trick of the draughtsman which so much impresses the general public as violent foreshortening," remarked the designer for a St. Louis lithographing establishment now taking a vacation without pay to a New Orleans Times-Democrat man. "I long wondered why, for, as a rule, the public objects to anything which seems to violate common sense. I at last came to the conclusion that the secret is the same as that of the "pursuing eyes"—namely, an apparent motion in the picture, which lends an uncanny mystery to it. It is, of course, not a conclusion to increase the self-satisfaction of the artist, who would like to see in the public interest some special recognition of his abilities. The trick is a favorite one with battle painters, who always have one of the prominent figures taking deadly aim at the spectator, and of late the advertisers have worked the racket to a finish with foreshortened highwaymen pointing foreshortened revolvers and foreshortened orators pointing foreshortening indexes, and I see that one of the weekly illustrated papers has just worked the scheme into its cover. The trick, however, is rather looked on askance by art committees and must be used with discretion if an artist does not want to draw upon himself the charge of fakery. A few years ago a violent example of the foreshortening trick was worked through into a prominent Northern exhibition of paintings. It was a woman, with extended arm pointing directly at the spectator, and the title, 'Conscience,' was one to work upon the imagination. Well, the picture simply swept the Casins and Homers, and Gabriel Maxes out of consideration, and was by long odds the popular success of the exhibit. One afternoon I was watching the crowd circling around, allowing itself to be pursued by its conscience, when an old Irishman attracted general attention by trying to ram his head behind the picture frame. I finally asked him what on earth he was up to, when he answered: 'Oi just want ta see how thim clock wor-r-ks is set that makes the dom thing turn.'"

EX-SLAVE'S SIGHT RESTORED.

Woman Nearly 100 Years Old Had Not Seen Light Since Civil War.

The blinded eyes of an old ex-slave were opened the other day at the Cincinnati city hospital after thirty years of sightless existence, and there was great rejoicing in the M ward.

Mrs. Mary Smith lives at 2617 Alms place. She was born nearly 100 years ago in Harrison County, Kentucky, and as a slave belonged to a family named Miller. Thomas Miller, her master, was a member of Morgan's band, whose raids are a matter of history. While in slavery she was married to a man named Smith, who died many years ago. While still a slave cataracts grew over the old lady's eyes, blotting out her sight, apparently forever. The first cataract began to make its appearance in 1854, and ten years later another closed the other eye. After being stricken blind she gained her liberty, but it was a sightless world to which her emancipation led her, yet with the help of her five children she bore up, and three years ago moved from Bourbon County, Kentucky, to this city and her present home.

Mrs. Smith was taken sick a few weeks ago, and was removed to the city hospital. After she had recovered she was told by the doctors there that in their opinion her sight could be restored. Skeptical to the core, Mrs. Smith refused to listen to them for days, but finally consented to have an operation performed upon her eyes.

Dr. D. T. Vail of the city hospital staff, who is famed all over the city for his optical surgery, looked the case over, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, and decided that he could help the patient. Then came the appointment at the clinic. The cataract over the left eye, the one that had first appeared, was removed after about an hour on the operating table. Two days afterwards Mrs. Smith began to discover glimpses of light. Then forms materialized, and finally her sight was restored, and for two days following the old ex-slave lay upon her cot thanking her Maker for the return of the most precious sense known to humankind. Yesterday Mrs. Smith was able to distinctly see her son Frank for the first time in her life. She had never seen her two daughters until yesterday morning, and, while chatting about her great good fortune last evening, she said that it was all like returning to the earth after an absence of over a quarter of a century.

The other cataract will be removed inside a fortnight, when it is believed Mrs. Smith will leave the hospital with almost as good sight as she had before the war.

LATE JUDICIAL DECISIONS.

The use of old barrels that have contained whisky, oil, etc., for shipping iron, is held, in Purdy vs. Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company (Pa.), 51 L. R. A. 881, not to make the employer liable for injury to an employe caused by explosion of a barrel when a match was lighted to read the number on it.

A contract to marry after the divorced wife of the man is dead, there being no impediment to an immediate marriage, is held, in Brown vs. Odill (Tenn.), 52 L. R. A. 660, not to be void for indefiniteness, or as in restraint of marriage, or on the ground of public policy. The authorities on the validity of agreement to marry on death or divorce of present husband or wife are collected in a note in this case.

The right of a passenger on the running board of a street car to recover for injuries caused by coming in contact with a pillar near the track in attempting to pass around the conductor, who was also on the board, in obedience to the conductor's direction to come forward and get a seat, is denied, in Third Avenue Railroad Company vs. Barton (C. C. A. 2d C.), [illegible] L. R. A. 471, unless under all the circumstances he acted as a man of ordinary prudence would have done.

Where a written contract does not contain all the terms of the transaction, the Supreme Court of South Carolina, in the case of Virginia Chemical Company vs. Moore (39 S. E. Rep., 346), holds that parole evidence is competent to show the entire transaction; and in an action on a written contract the defendant can set up a counterclaim, and show by parole evidence an independent agreement entered into between the parties at the same time, not varying the terms of the written contract, and claim damages for breach thereof.

Willing to Oblige.

An Englishman at a dinner once told a tale of a tiger he had shot which measured twenty-four feet from snout to tail-tip. Everyone was astonished, but no one ventured to insinuate a doubt of the truth of the story.

Presently a Scotsman told his tale. He had once caught a fish which he said he was unable to pull in alone, managing only to land it at last with the aid of six friends. "It was a skate, and it covered two acres."

Silence followed this recital, during which the offended Englishman left the table. The host followed. After returning, he said to the Scotsman: "Sir, you have insulted my friend. You must apologise."

"I dinna insoolt him," said the Scot.

"Yes you did, with your two-acre fish story. You must apologise."

"Well," said the offender, slowly, with the air of one making a great concession, "tell him if he will take ten feet off that tiger I will see what I can do with the fish."—London Tit-Bits.

The Rustic Way.

A more or less fair cyclist, known to Punch, met a farm laborer in an English lane. Said she:

"Can you direct me to Higham Upley, please?"

"You've only got to foller yer nose, miss," said he, "but you'll find it up 'ill work!"

There seems to be more than one way of saying that a nose is "tip-tilted like the petal of a flower."

There is a dull sort of a man who becomes prominent in spite of the fun made of him.

If a girl marries a poor man, it is strange how soon her old friends forget his name.
