THE HILLSBORO MERCURY.

The Argus is ever contentious on any question of public nature, but it cannot stoop to the level of bandying scandal with papers like the Sunday Mercury, and Welcome, of Portland, and the Hillsboro Independent, particularly, in their vein of slush. When The Argus deals with cowards it must be with cowards who are public cowards, not private ghouls. The coward who shoots from ambush needs no retort. He is worse than the worst Fillipino that ever drew the breath of life. So long as the Independent gets its inspiration from skulking cowards, just so long it will put itself beyond the plane of decency. Here is where the matter stands—and the best of the bargain it is—and the public has the sense to see it in its proper light. Of this The Argus publisher has the assurance of many citizens who understand and appreciate decency, and also, who realize the source from which the indecency comes. Poor, old Mr. Gault isn't to blame for the sheet he runs. He is merely a tool, and The Argus quotes public knowledge when it states that, no doubt, he is an "unwilling" tool, at that.

The moths are liable to eat holes in Whitelaw Reid's knee breeches before he gets to wear them at the coronation next fall. Wouldn't it make you smile—Whitelaw Reid in knee breeches? It is funny, isn't it?

President Roosevelt at dinner on Independence Day with Schwab, Fricke, and other millionaires, and told the people that the "trusts" must in some way be governed. It looks as though he is keeping the right kind of company for their "government," eh?

The Argus was the first paper in Oregon to suggest that the people be permitted to take a hand in saying how much of an appropriation should be given for the Lewis & Clark exposition. This has led several other valley papers to advocate this method of disposing of the question.

The Evanston library has taken a splendid way to advertise some literature which is not at all persona grata to those who desire the purest of reading for young people. "What fools we mortals be!" The best way for the trustees to have done was to have burned the books, said nothing about it, and then, when called for, mentioned that they were not in the library.

The small fry papers throughout the state are crying against an extra session of the legislature. That a flat salary law would save the state of Oregon $40,000 per year for four years is a fact, and the officers would be then well paid. The extra session should be called by Governor Geer, and many think he will make a call. The politicians do not want it, of course. But it is very hard to find an old-time politician who is looking through the big end of the glass.
