Portland is having a great deal of discussion these days, pro and con Sunday closing of the Lewis & Clark Fair. As a matter of fact, if the Fair shall be closed on the Sabbath, an injustice will be done its laboring population. There would be nothing particularly wrong in visiting the fair, even after one had been to church in the morning. A very good sort of compromise would be to keep the grounds closed in the forenoon and evening, and open between two and six in the afternoon. This would not at all interfere with the attendance of people to the various houses of worship, and would give those who work all week an opportunity to visit the exposition by day.
