

MESSANGER CANIENSIS

By Barry Pain

It was close and sultry. No breath of air stirred the pines, and the mule deer stalks beside the roadway were drooped flat to earth. Even the drone of the locusts seemed faint and dispirited, and the occasional cry of a blue jay in the woods was far more in the nature of a protest than anything else.

On the top rider of the rickety rail fence beside the road sat Mr. Thomas Morley Gray, smoking very methodically, as he did all things, an ancient briar pipe. A huge pine shaded his perch, but for all that Mr. Gray was perspiring and evidently ill at ease. Every few minutes he looked at his watch, and every time he did this he grunted disgustedly and uttered an expletive under his breath.

When an hour had passed—a long, dragging hour—during which he had alternately fumed himself with his hat and waged unequal combat with the mosquitoes, which despite the smoke had declared hostilities, Gray put on his hat with a determined air and slid down from the fence. As he did so he saw a cloud of dust moving along the roadway in his direction. Then out of the dust cloud emerged a yellow dog, trotting along heavily, with his tongue hanging from his mouth.

At the sight of the man the dog gave vent to a series of joyful barks. He came the remaining distance in long bounds, and when he reached the man he stood before him, his tail in violent motion.

"Billy," said Gray, stopping to pat the panting beast—"good old Billy! What—what the—He broke off suddenly in surprise, for tied to the dog's collar was a violet envelope of small dimensions, and the superscription on it was his own name. Gray snatched the envelope and tore it open.

"Dear old Tommy," he read.

"Humph!" he interpolated. "I know these 'dear old Tommies'—trouble." He again turned to the note.

I can't read Chaucer beneath the big pine here with you this afternoon, because I'm going out automobileing with Mr. Bennett. Excuse haste and brevity, but I'm waiting for me now. I shall show Billy your golf clubs here and tell him to find you, which I'm sure he'll do. Now, don't be angry and make me call you "Tommy Green Eyes" again. Trusting Billy may find you soon.

HELEN.

Mr. Gray surveyed the cloudless sky for several tumultuous moments.

"Now, wouldn't that?" he began. The sentence died in an inane gurgle, while Gray's face grew wrathfully red, and great beads of perspiration stood on his forehead. Then he tore a leaf from his notebook, hastily scrawled a few words and tied it to Billy's collar, where the other note had reposed.

He arose and, followed by the dog, stalked down the road. When they came to the fork, Gray pointed down the left hand road and said sternly: "Home, Billy. Home, sir." After he had watched the dog trot off dejectedly into the dust he himself went slowly up the other road.

Late that evening Billy scrambled into the hammock where his mistress lay. She saw the note and in the dim light from the window beside her read these words:

My Dear Helen—I trust you'll have a pleasant afternoon. Undoubtedly it will be much preferable to Chaucer beneath the pine. Billy reached me after I had waited several hours for you. The time passed very pleasantly, thanks to the villosous head and swarms of famine-stricken mosquitoes. Being the soul of devotion, I shall be delighted any afternoon in the future to go through the inquiry again for the sake of the reward of a similar note, telling me you are automobileing with the latest arrival in town.

THOMAS M. GRAY.

The next afternoon, as Gray was knocking a ball about the links, Billy again came trotting up with the violet envelope attached to his collar. In the shade of some sunbush Gray read the contents:

Your latest outburst duly received per Billy, Mr. Tommy Green Eyes. Pray, don't subject yourself to heat and mosquitoes on my account.

HELEN.

The note Billy carried back read as follows:

Thanks. I had no intention of doing so.

T. M. G.

Then for a woe there was silence between them. Gray in his anger carefully avoided the Dennison cottage in his walks along the shore. Every afternoon, however, as he sat on the piazza of the casino he saw Helen Dennison and Hammett dash by in an automobile, which very probably accounts for Mr. Thomas Morley Gray's proclivities to knock about the bay in his catboat, carrying full sail in a double reef breeze.

Early one evening Gray was crossing the lawn of the casino when he heard a mighty yelping and ki-yi-ing in the road. He turned back to find Billy and a brindle bull terrier hard at it. With judicious kicks he managed to get them apart, then his heart came into his throat, for attached to Billy's collar was a bit of violet envelope. Gray snatched it eagerly. It had been sadly mutilated in the fray, but a few words in one corner of the paper were still legible. "I was just trying to make you jealous," he read, and in another place he made out, "I'm homesome for you, you foolah!"

Miss Helen Dennison, sitting on the broad veranda of the cottage, saw a strange outfit trotting sedately across the lawn. It was Billy, a wreath of oak leaves about his neck and tied to his tail a small silk flag, which fluttered bravely in the breeze. Prominent on the oak wreath was an envelope addressed to herself.

My Dear Helen—she read and laughed softly—I received but the merest fragments of your note, for Billy tried conclusions with a bull terrier with disastrous results. Nevertheless enough remained to give me considerable enlightenment. Billy's appearance when he reaches you—it doesn't get into other difficulties on the way—is the result of my poor attempt to express my state of mind. We'd better make it early fall and spend our honeymoon in the Berkshires.

And Mr. Thomas Morley Gray, who strode up the gravel walk at that moment, behind Billy straggling from the embrace of a young woman, who blushed furiously as she saw him
