The result of the city election in Chicago, and other Mississippi states, goes to show that radicalism is growing. Chicago, which returned a big majority for Roosevelt, elects Judge Dunn, a municipal ownership candidate on the Democratic ticket, by a majority over all other candidates. In Kansas and Missouri, republican towns are now turned over to the Democrats, and in every instance where election has been positive for Democratic success it has been where the candidates were radical for municipal ownership and kindred radical ideas. This augurs well for the reform people. With a little more help from Roosevelt there will be some show for the Democrats in the next presidential election.
