The government conducts its postoffice system on a practical basis, and the methods are fully as good as any private corporation ever established. It has no equal in simplicity. It not only affords a carrier system, but it gives a splendid banking plan, and losses are nil. Considering the postoffice business, its immense ramifications, and the millions upon millions involved, it is marvellous, and justifies a conclusion not unwarranted that it is insanity to aver our government could not operate our railways fully as satisfactorily as the private management. The government is just as capable of operating railways as it is the postal system, and through national ownership it can give the benefit of good service at a nominal cost to shipper and traveler. This is the one way to set to the conflict between government and railway corporations—and the only practical solution of a great question. Politics could no more enter government ownership of railways than it can enter the postal service.

Frank C. Baker, the republican state chairman, each year gets a neat little chunk out of the state printer's office—and the taxpayer foots the bill. Isn't it about time that Baker let go his hold on the public tax? Isn't it about time that Oregon quit paying tribute to a scheming politician? Is the state so destitute of reason that it must continue, year after year, paying a bonus to Frank C. Baker, and making state printers in office rich after a term of service? It is an outrage that the practice has been tolerated so long—and it is just such things as this that keeps Oregon's head down in shame in the recent land-fraud trials. Honey-combed with such a shiftless manner of doing public business, is it wonder that the state has slept on its conscience?

The Deacon Feels the Sunshine. O' Winter 's gone; an' Spring is comin'; Ostin' leetle closer ev'ry day; Time to feel like standin' roun' an' hummin'— An' time for foolish verse an' round-daley!

Sun 's ev'ry day s'gettin' higher; Warmin' up rheumatics in my frame; Seems like leaves an' birds is gettin' nighber; While the ol' fire-place aint needin' any flame. Squir'l 's comin' out o' winter's keepin'; Robins is a buildin' in the trees; Flow'r 's wakin' up from months o' sleepin'— An' all the worl' has left its bed of ease. Hens is layin' eggs like they're bustin'; Knockin' down the price to fifteen cents; Garden 's waitin'—fer the hoe that 's rustin'; An' guess I'd better fix the garden fence.

Who hates o' Spring has got no feelin'; Never sees no joy in leaf an' bloom—Sees no life in sunshine's mighty health! Might jes' as well be sleepin' in the tomb.

Cupid, Medical Assistant

By LA TOUCRE HANCOCK

Copyright, 1905, by E. C. Parcells

Dick Fremont was in an unromantic state of mind. A little Cupid, which was holding a finger to its lips and gazing at him from the top of an inkstand on a table by his side, seemed to warn him that he had been physically exhausting himself lately. He had been working too hard. At present he had pains all over his body. His tongue was distinctly discolored, and his pulse was weak. His head was throbbing, and there was scarcely a portion of his body which did not ache. Loss of time meant loss of money to him, for he wrote for a living. If he did not work he was perfectly aware that some one else would get ahead of him. Not that he had easily given up, but the task of putting words together had proved in his present condition as hard as carrying blocks of stone.

In his extremity he thought of a doctor. All of medical men he had a horror. At the moment, however, there seemed to be no excuse for not con-

"Why, may—Miss Montgomery—your?" querying his aversion, so he dispatched a boy with orders to bring the nearest medical practitioner in a hurry.

He had made a heroic effort to forestall any aid from such a source. On the table near by were bottles of all sizes and shapes, containing nearly every advertised patent medicine which he thought suited to his peculiar complaint. He had partaken of them all with much the same result as if he had drunk a "hazing" concoction. At last he had given up all hope of successful self treatment and resigned himself to a dubitative trial of "kill or cure" at the hands of a doctor.

The little Cupid attracted his eyes to a photograph lying close at his hand. He took it up, looked at it earnestly and meditated. Just as he was about to press it to his lips a knock came at the door. He said wearily, "Come in" and a woman's voice responded:

"Pardon me, but are you the gentleman who sent for a doctor? The boy who called me said you lived on the third floor, but I did not quite catch the name he mentioned."

The tones of the voice seemed familiar to Dick. He hastily hid the photograph he had in his hand behind the pillow on his chair and looked up at his visitor.

"Why, May—Miss Montgomery—your?" With a blush the woman he addressed turned as if to go away.

"It must have been a mistake," she began, when he interrupted her.

"No, no! Please come in!" She hesitated and then, closing the door, looked at him.

There was a pause, and neither spoke. Then Dick said, in a half whisper, "Are you a—doctor?"

"I am," she replied, with a smile, "but I don't think you meant to send for me."

"Well—he hesitated. "I'm glad to see any doctor."

"Thank you." She almost laughed at the doubtful compliment.

"No! I don't mean that. I—I really had no idea of seeing you. I told the bellboy to go for the nearest doctor, and I never thought!"

"To see me? No; I suppose not. You didn't know I had taken my degree. Of course not. I don't suppose my affairs interested you after—"

"After our quarrel? Oh, yes, they did, I assure you!"

She stopped him with a glance.

"You do look sick," said she, "really sick, and—advancing to the table—" "What on earth have you been dosing yourself with?"

"A little medicine." "A little medicine? A little poison!" she exclaimed, with a laugh, as she took up the several bottles, one after the other, and examined them.

"Toothache drops! Paregoric! Dear me, you must have a compilation of ailments!"

"I suppose I have," he wearily assented. "I've tried them all, and I'm not a bit better!"

She burst out laughing. Then she came a little nearer to him and said, hesitating, "Let me feel your pulse."

He put his hand in hers. His pulse was beating at fever heat. She counted mentally, then touching him on the shoulder gently pressed his body forward and placed her ear to his back. As she did so the pillow fell down, revealing the hidden picture. She started as she saw her own photograph. Then, with a quite smile, she said, "Are you in pain?"

"Don't get up," she said gently. "You are too sick!" "Can't you help me?" She smiled. "I think I can." She took out her prescription book and wrote on a leaf. "Here is a prescription which—" "Oh, bless the medicine! I don't want that. If you only—" "Will you take it? See what it is!" "Oh, I can't read doctors' hieroglyphics. I mean I don't understand Latin." She handed him the slip of paper. He took it and carefully scanned what she had written, which was merely her name—"May Montgomery." "Will I take it?" he almost shouted. "Will you give it to me?" She nodded her head. The cure was complete.

Started the Doctor. The doctor, returning from his holiday, heard that a parishioner had "lost his old Betty" and at once hurried off to console him.

"I'm grieved to hear of your loss, Giles," he began.

"Oh, well, sir, thanks," replied Giles, "it's a pity, of course, but she was a rare lady. She would never do anything unless she was well thrashed."

"Tut, tut; dear me—" "It's true, sir. She was a bad bargain. Thank goodness, the fair's next week, and I'll pick up a better one there. I hope, if I don't get suited before."

"But don't you think, even for appearances' sake, you had better wait a little longer?" urged the clergyman, getting rather annoyed at his tone.

"Oh, no," responded Giles. "I've had my eye on one for some little time, and what I get for Betty's skin will go toward it. I tell 'er what, sir, I would'n't mind havin' one of your young uns, if you're agreeable."

"I won't stop to hear another word of such abominable talk," said the disgusted doctor. "There wasn't a better woman in the village than your wife Betty."

"Who? Who's talking about my wife?" said the astonished Giles. "I'm talking about my old mare that died yesterday."—London Globe.

The Properties of Cocaine. Travelers in Peru and countries where cocoa grows chew the leaves of this plant for the purpose of allaying the sense of hunger and the feeling of exhaustion that accompanies it. At first the leaves were thought to possess food elements, but now it is known that the cocaine they contain merely allays the irritability of the nerves that produce the sense of hunger. Cocaine is an alkaloid made from the cocoa leaf, which has the effect of completely destroying the sensibility of nerves.

The discovery of this active principle of the cocoa leaf explained fully and satisfactorily the effect produced by chewing the leaves. An infusion of the leaf might be used with good results in allaying the gnawing appetite that follows some forms of fever or in cases where the sense of hunger is due to a diseased condition of the stomach. Cocaine should never be used except on the prescription of a trustworthy physician, because it is dangerous. The cocaine habit is more readily formed than either the morphine or the liquor habit and is far more rapid in its work of destruction.

Asked and Answered. In the "Reminiscences of Sir Henry Hawkins" (Lord Braintree) a story is told concerning Jack, the pet terrier which always accompanied the famous judge wherever he went.

On one occasion, when on circuit and driving to the cathedral of a certain city for the preliminary religious service, Jack sat beside his master in the sheriff's coach. The sheriff and his chaplain, a most solemn looking, ascetic high churchman, occupied the opposite seat.

His lordship in relating the story says that the chaplain eyed the dog for a long time with great uneasiness. Then, as they neared the cathedral, he seemed to get alarmed and, in a state of great agitation, stammering said:

"My lord, may I—ah—ask if the dog is going to divine service?"

"Well, I don't know," replied his lordship. "I shall ask him, Jack, would you like to go to church?"

Jack growled and lifted his head to bowl.

"No," went on the judge. "Jack says that he doesn't like dry sermons."
