Poor Bowser Is Squelched
Philosopher Receives an Unexpected Visit From His Mother-in-law.
READS RIOT ACT TO HIM
Trouble All Started When He Was Told to Keep Quiet Because Wife Had a Headache.

[Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastman.]
MR. BOWSER had been "good" for a week. He had picked up several cloths in the back yard without twitting Mrs. Bowser of reckless extravagance. The monthly gas bill had come in, and he hadn't charged her with a plot to send them to the poorhouse. The berry and melon peddlers had paused in front of his house and shouted and yelled and shrieked, but while Mrs. Bowser trembled in fear of a calamity he had simply smiled—not one word of fault about his meals, about the cook, about the watermelon bought for dinner and kept in the icebox for two days and then found to be as green as grass. It had been a goodness that almost frightened Mrs. Bowser, but Saturday evening was to bring a change.
On the morning of that day she woke up with a headache, but concealed the fact until Mr. Bowser had left for the office. Then she went to bed and prayed that she would be rid of the thing before he came home at night. It was not to be, however. At 5 o'clock p. m.

she was groaning and sighing and had something of a fever, and just at that time he walked into the house. Some of his "goodness" had worn off, but he had come home fairly good natured.
Told to Keep Quiet.
As he cringed his hat on the rock in the hall he cried "Hello!" and began singing, and the cook came running up stairs to say:
"Please hush, sir. Your wife is in bed with a bad headache."
"Hi! Mrs. Bowser in bed, eh?"
"Yes, sir."
"In bed with a headache?"
"Yes, sir."
"And she won't be up to dinner?"
"No, sir."
"By thunder, but that's a pretty how-de-do! I leave this house this morning, and she is singing around like a lark. I come home at night and find her in bed with a headache that will probably last a week and may prove fatal in the end. Things need seeing to around here."
Mrs. Bowser heard him coming up stairs with a stamp, stamp, stamp, and she closed her eyes in hopes he would think her asleep and go down again. It was a vain hope.
"Mrs. Bowser, what does this mean?" she demanded as he hovered over her.
"No-nothing. I've just got a bit of a headache. It's better than it was, and I hope it will go away pretty soon."
"Oh, you hope, do you? Well, it's no use. That headache is going to last you for the next ten days, and for the next ten days this house has got to be like a morgue. What have you been doing to bring a headache on yourself?"
"I may be a little bilious."
Scolded His Wife.
"A little! By gosh, you are loaded down with it! That comes from making a pig of yourself. During the past week I have seen you eating cabbage, turnips, beets, pickles, ice cream, sausages and a dozen other things fit only for horse food. Do you think you can do these things and not suffer for them?"
Mrs. Bowser had eaten nothing of the kind, but she was too ill to enter into an argument.
"And you've probably been barefooted around the house, and sat in the breeze after washing your hair, and drunk gallons of ice water. You are like all other women. Not one in a thousand knows how to take care of herself. I am not a lesson to see you suffer. It may be a lesson to you."
"Won't you please go down and eat your dinner?" whispered Mrs. Bowser.
"After I have had my say. I want to know by what right?"
A hand reached over his shoulder, and a thumb and finger clutched his ear, and a voice said:
"I think you had better go at once. I think you had."

the eyes of his mother-in-law. Her last letter, received only a week previous, said that she was laid up with a sprained ankle and had no hope of getting out of the house for a month.
Ousted by Mother-in-law.
Mr. Bowser gasped and turned pale as he was led out of the room to the head of the stairs.
"Now, go down softly," continued the mother-in-law, "and you make mighty little noise down here. I'll have an interview with you in about ten minutes."
"Who—who asked you to come down?" he demanded as he pulled himself together and came to a halt.
"Go right along, Samuel. I don't have to wait for an invitation. I come when I please!"
Mr. Bowser went down to dinner, but he had no appetite. His house had broken up. The cook brought in his tea, and he turned on her with:
"Look here, Nancy, why did you let that old woman in?"
"Let her in! Why, no sooner had I opened the door an inch when she bustled her way in and pushed me aside as if I was a chip. 'And who be you that makes so free with other people's houses?' says I."
"Shut your head and tend to your business," says she.
"I'll call the master!"
"I'll call him myself. I hear that buffoon voice of his upstairs."
Gave Him a Good Talking To.
"That's the way it went, Mr. Bowser, and the next thing I saw she had you by the ear on the stairs and was talking to you as if you was a kid ten years old. It's the mother-in-law, I s'pose?"
"Yes—hang it!"
"I can't blame you for taking the name of the Lord in vain, and I pitie you from the bottom of me heart. If I was you, sir—"
But there was no time to finish. The mother-in-law appeared, and Nancy fled to the kitchen.
"Now, then, Samuel, you bustle along with your dinner and be ready to go to the drug store. I did have a sprained ankle, but when I got to figuring that it was about time for you to break out again I got well and came down. You are not tickled to death to see me, but that makes no difference. It won't do you any good to sit there and scowl like a bear with a sore paw. You have got to toe the mark while I'm around."
"Woman, don't talk that way to me!" he shouted.
"Stop right there, Samuel. Don't you shout and call me 'woman'!"
"But this is my house!"
"That doesn't make the slightest difference. A mother-in-law can go and come as she pleases. I want some mustard and ginger from the drug store, and if you slam the door when you go out you'll find me at your heels."
Planned a Rebellion.
Mr. Bowser shrank back from the table, with a glint in his eye, and two minutes later he was out of the house. He got the ginger and mustard and sent them back by a small boy, and then he started off for a walk. He had determined to assert his independence of that woman. He would either return and bluff her out of her shoes or remain away for a week.
Men who saw him walking along with his head down said to themselves: "Poor old baird! He is mourning for his lost hair."
Women who noticed that he dragged his feet as he walked whispered to each other:
"His home is not a happy one."
"The hoodlums running up and down draw aside as Mr. Bowser passed and felt in their hearts that he was a man needing consolation. He had walked for an hour when an arm was passed through his and a voice said in his ear: "I have been looking for you, Samuel. Come along. Didn't I tell you that you must toe the mark?"
Mr. Bowser looked at a policeman appealingly, but the officer refused to interfere. He thought for a moment of wrenching himself free and fleeing far away—as Canada—but the clutch on his arm tightened, and the voice said:
"Don't try it, Samuel—not on your life!"
M. QUAD.
Spiteful.
"While Constance was away this summer she sold kisses at 50 cents each at a church fair to raise funds to help build a new church," says the girl with the collection of fraternity pins.
"She did?" smiles the girl with the pined eyes. "I suppose they were merely going to build one of those lit-tle one story chapels, really?"—Judge.

A Bold Step.
To overcome the well-grounded and reasonable objections of the more intelligent to the use of secret, medicinal compounds, Dr. B. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., some time ago decided to make a bold departure from the usual course pursued by the makers of put-up medicines for domestic use, and so has published broadcast and openly to the whole world, a full and complete list of all the ingredients entering into the composition of his celebrated "Favorite Prescription." Thus he has taken his numerous patrons and patients into his full confidence. Thus too he has removed his medicines from among secret nostrums of doubtful merits, and made them remedies of known composition. By this bold step, Dr. Pierce has shown that his formulae are not such as should be kept in a secret jar, but that they are fit to stand the closest scrutiny.
Not only does the wrapper of every bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the famous medicine for weak stomach, torpid liver or biliousness and indigestion, the uses wherever located, have printed upon it, in plain English, a full and complete list of all the ingredients entering into its composition, but the book has been compiled from numerous standard medical works, of all the different schools of practice, containing very numerous extracts from the writings of leading practitioners of medicine, endorsing in the most emphatic manner the uses and value of the medicine. One of these little books will be mailed free to any one sending address on postal card by letter to Dr. B. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., and requesting the same. From this little book will be learned that Dr. Pierce's medicines contain no alcohol, narcotics, mineral agents or other poisons, or injurious agents, and that they are made from the most valuable roots of great value; also that some of the most valuable ingredients, such as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for weak, nervous, over-worked, "run-down," nervous and debilitated persons, is composed of the most valuable medicinal plants entering into the composition of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was known to the Indians as "The Indian's Friend," and its uses are not a few of our most valuable native medicinal plants was gained from the Indians. As medicine, containing only the most valuable roots of great value, also that some of the most valuable ingredients, such as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for weak, nervous, over-worked, "run-down," nervous and debilitated persons, is composed of the most valuable medicinal plants entering into the composition of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was known to the Indians as "The Indian's Friend," and its uses are not a few of our most valuable native medicinal plants was gained from the Indians.
Dr. Pierce's medicines are sold by all dealers in medicines.
