The failure of C. E. Loes, the railway promoter, will in no way affect the fortunes of the United Railways, says the Oregon news article. Mr. Loes' Drain contracts and his plant are now gone by the board and his assets are now in the hands of a receiver, E. L. Sabin, of Portland, who represents the creditors. The United Railway is expected to go ahead and commence pushing work. Construction is now being done on a small scale on Front Street, Portland.

M. L. Vincent, administrator of the estate of Fred L. Brown, late of Gales Creek, was in town Monday and called at the Argus office. Mr. Vincent states that the published reports of the death of Mr. Brown were erroneous. He states that Mr. Brown had the best of care from his neighbors, and that until his final sickness he had never been in ill health. He made this statement because of the publishing of the alleged fact that the old man was destitute, and had no care. He says the old gentleman had money in his pocket, and was not wanting for any of the comforts of life, as his neighbors all look a kindly interest in his case.
