PERISHED WITH HEAD HANGING FROM WAGON

Axel Anderson, of Progress,
Meets Peculiar Death

SUPPOSED TO BE INTOXICATED

Feet Caught in Rack and Left Him
Suspended in Air

Axel Anderson, who resides near Progress, was found at the house of a man by the name of Levy, on the Portland mountain, Saturday morning, with his head suspended from his wagon, his feet having caught in the rack planks, and his body lurching over the wheel. The team, which Anderson had driven out from Portland, passed Ziontown early in the evening, Friday, and he had evidently, after passing Ziontown, started back to Portland on another road. It is supposed that he was intoxicated at the time. The team was found near the Levy barn, Saturday morning, and had doubtless remained there a large part of the night. Anderson was removed from his perilous position, and was yet breathing. He was put in the barn and covered up and later taken to the house of Ben Patton, where he was visited by Dr. F. M. Robinson, who at once said that the man was too far gone to be resuscitated. Restoratives were given but too late, and Anderson soon passed away.

Anderson was a hardworking young fellow, but too fond of liquor. He has a young wife, and with the family the father resides. The father was taken to the asylum some months ago, but was discharged as cured. The father was in the habit of becoming drunk and when intoxicated would fight the daughter-in-law, and it is said that he struck her the last of the week, while the son was in Portland.

Coroner E. C. Brown went to Progress, Monday, and held an investigation.

It was at first thought that there might have been some foul play, and for this reason Coroner Brown was called. He called no jury, however, as there was no evidence that violence had been done, excepting that on the man's chest there was a discoloration that looked as though he might have been struck by some blunt instrument. On the other hand he could have sustained the wound by falling on the boiler stake, prior to his falling and getting in the position from which, under his drunken condition, he was unable to extricate himself.

Saturday morning the father of Axel, who is very unruly, and a terrific drinker, went in search of the son, as did the wife. The father found the team and brought it home, leaving Axel lying in the barn. The wife met him as he returned with the team, but he would tell her nothing of Axel's whereabouts. Many of the neighbors down there think the old man, who is crazy drunk, might have stamped Axel when he was in the barn, but this is all mere conjecture.

Owing to the unprecedented floods in California there has been a potato famine in that state, and Oregon tubers have gone soaring. The trouble of delivery of the Oregon product, however, has been the fly in the ointment, as there can be no shipment over the Southern Pacific into San Francisco. Consequently shippers have been compelled to ship by vessel, and this has not at all been satisfactory. Five or six carloads have been sent out of Hillsboro the past week, the price per sack ranging from $1.15 upward.

JOHN T. McNAMARA GETS YEAR IN PEN

District Attorney Hedges
Changes Indictment

BURGLARY CHANGED TO LARCENY

Question of Intent Entered into the Case

John T. McNamara's attorneys, Bagley & Hare, worked hard for their client, and as a result the young man gets off lightly. The original indictment was for burglary in a dwelling, and the minimum sentence was five years. As Bagley & Hare had brought several witnesses to swear that "Bricktop" was drunk, and the question of intent entered the case, District Attorney Hedges agreed to enter a new indictment, that of "larceny from a dwelling." To this McNamara pleaded guilty on Monday morning, and Judge McBride at once sentenced him to a year in the state penitentiary. This will mean ten or eleven months provided McNamara is a model prisoner—and he generally is that.

The clothing stolen by McNamara, and the watch that he appropriated were not worth over four or five dollars, if worth that much, and his attorneys impressed the District Attorney with the fact that the prisoner had never stolen anything unless he was under the influence of "booze," when he suddenly became desirous of helping himself.

McNamara has concluded that after he gets out of the state institution he will never again look on the glass when it contains anything that is intoxicating.

WANTED—A FRUIT INSPECTOR

Sherwood, March 23.
To the Editor: Have we a fruit inspector in Washington County? If so, it appears that he is not looking after the trees down in the Middleton and Sherwood sections. Some of the people down here have set out young trees, and are trying to take care of them, but many of the old orchards have not been sprayed or trimmed for years, and they are regular crusts of scale, and will soon ruin the young orchards. These old orchards should be looked after. If the fruit inspector would but make one trip in here and notify the people what to expect in case the law was not followed, it would be a great help to us all. Yours Truly,
A Subscriber.

MRS. WILLIAM BEARD TAKES CARBOLIC ACID

Very Little Entered the Stomach, and She Will Recover

FAMILY TROUBLE ALLEGED CAUSE

Lives About Six Miles Above Banks, in Timber

Mrs. Etta Beard, wife of Wm. Beard, swallowed carbolic acid, which she had borrowed from a neighbor, on the pretext of getting it for a disinfectant, Monday after noon, and for some time her life was despaired of. The woman has been having some trouble in the family circle and the rash act is attributed to this fact. Dr. Burgess, of Banks, says that he thinks very little entered the stomach, and that probably the acid contracted the throat and caused her to emit it before it reached the vital organ.

John Lippert, who had seen such cases, before, was one of the first on the scene, and lard was administered. The woman was unconscious for a time, but towards midnight recovered and complained of her sufferings. The Beards have two or three little children.

Mrs. Beard is resting easy and there is all probability of her recovery.
