WASHINGTON COUNTY, OREGON Population, 20,000. First County in dairying; 1100 cases condensed milk daily; two big condensers; billions of feet merchantable timber. Thirty million feet annual cut. Will nearly double product this year; richest garden lands in the world; bulk of county can drive to Portland and return in a day; finest market; great hop district; fine school system; finest climate on coast; mild winters; no county debt; best natured and best read people in world, population considered. Best in everything.

HILLSBORO County seat; 2,000 people; Six churches, Protestant and Catholic; two banks; two telephone systems, big milk condenser; sawmill; two railroads; and electric line coming. AND THERE YOU ARE!

It is nonsense to pay too serious attention to fools, so the Argus will pass up, in the main, the article by the Times, of Forest Grove, last week. The Times had nothing in any way to refute what the Argus said about there having been more expenditure on rock road improvement in the vicinity of the Grove than here—in fact we have had nothing. The Times' man simply made an ass of himself—that's all—and as he can't help it, it would be folly to rave at his insane twaddle. The Argus simply told where the various county officials came from, and stated the facts about money expended on roads, and the Times comes out with a lot of "skunk bouquet," fit only to be found in a paper like the Sunday Mercury. Mahomet said: "Deal kindly with the fool, lest Allah be displeased with you," and the Argus will follow the great teacher of the star and crescent, with the advice to Forest Grove people to put a dairy yard poultrie on the Times editor's head until the heated term is a matter of history.

Haywood, the secretary of the Federation of Miners, was acquitted at Boise, and Moyer has been released on a bond. Pettibone is still in jail and will be tried this fall. The testimony of Orchard evidently was not believed by the jury, and in this they were only following the dictates of reason Orchard, caught red-handed, wanted immunity, and McPartland, who has an unenviable record as a Pinkertonian, and who incited the poor Molly Maguire to violence, in Pennsylvania, years ago, was the instrument who hatched up a story, with Orchard, to down the miners' union. Orchard may have killed Idaho's governor because of private reasons, and he may have killed him with the idea of making the union pay him under threat of implicating him. In either event, the mine owners spent lots of money to break up the union by trying to hang the Federation officers. They hired Borah and Hawley, and they are not cheap men. They have spent thousands with the tool, McPartland, only to see twelve reasonable men turn down their work. Borah, who blew his heated breath for two days to convince the jury that they should convict Haywood, is himself under indictment for attempting to defraud the government in land fraud cases. It was a nice try to down organized labor, but it was far-fetched, and there is naturally joy in the ranks of the intermountain working men. It is idle for the press prejudiced in favor of the brutal mine owners to cry because the jury freed Haywood, but it wasn't in the brains and hearts of twelve men to believe the wretch, Orchard, whose story was doubtless put up by the man-hunter, McPartland, who was trying to earn his blood money.

R. H. Greer returned from the coast, Tuesday, after a ten days' stay with his family. Norman Greer joined the family, upon the return of R. H.

Mrs. E. DeWitt Connell, well known here, was injured in an auto accident near Portland, the last of the week. Her injuries were not serious, although she had a narrow escape from death.

Jos. Connell, of near Glencoe, says that numerous trees were struck out that way, last night, and that but four telephones are in commission in all that section.

MORTON'S HOMECOMING.

By Lester Comstock. Copyrighted, 1907, by C. H. Sutherland. The cabinman regarded Morton with amazement as he gave his direction. "That hotel was torn down five years ago," he said. "There's a twelve story office building there now." Morton named another hotel, only to be met with fresh disappointment, and with an impatient gesture he sank back in the cab. "I want to go to a good hotel," he said. "You know better than I where I want to go."

THE VISION SEEMED SO REAL.

mark. Six years had wrought changes as great as those that had been effected within his heart.

Six years before the world had seemed bright and pleasant. Lucy Desmond had loved him, and his prospects had begun to materialize. Then had come the crash. Howard Desmond had sacrificed his daughter to save his fortune. Half a million was needed to support his tottering ventures. Metcalf would lend the money, but not until Lucy had become Mrs. Metcalf had the loan been made. Ten days later the vein had been struck in the mine which Morton owned, and he was a millionaire almost overnight. For weeks he had railed against the fate that brought him fortune too late to give him the only thing worth while, the companionship of the woman he loved.

He had tried to meet her in their social encounters with the indifference that convention demanded, but there had come a night when the intoxication of the music, the heavy scent of flowers, had been upon them. It had been in the conservatory at the Clevers' dance, and for one mad moment he had held her in his arms, begging her to elope with him.

But even as he pleaded there had come the sense of right. He had gently released her and had fled the place. The dawn had found him still in his evening clothes pacing the floor of his apartment, and as the fresh morning air fanned his flushed face he made his resolution. Before the end of the week he had disposed of all his American interests and had gone abroad. He left no kin behind, and none knew where he had gone. For six years he had rounded three continents, but always off the path of the tourist. Then had come the fierce longing for home, and he had come back.

Now that he was here he was not certain that he did not regret his decision. All had changed. Everything reminded him that he had lost his place in the life of the city. The stopping of the carriage roused him, and he paid his driver and followed the bellboy into the hotel. He found the stillness of his room intolerable, and after vainly trying to interest himself in the papers he threw them aside and went for a walk. Perhaps in the busy throng he could shake off his memories.

Unconsciously he turned his steps in the direction of the park and was well into the shady recesses before he realized where he was. Then he roused himself with a start. It had been Lucy's favorite walk. The little summer house where they had spent such happy afternoons before Cupid had led in a war that before the onslaughts of Mammon. It seemed perfectly natural that when he had turned the curve he should see her sitting there in the same place where she had sat that afternoon when she told him of Metcalf's ultimatum. He smiled at himself for his belief, but the vision seemed so real that he kept on and presently sank into the seat beside her. The girl raised her head and smiled. "Lucy," he said wonderingly as he took the firm soft hand she offered. "Is it really you, dear? Of course I know it isn't, but you seem so real. You have come to the hundreds of times before, both waking and dreaming, but never so plainly, dear." "But suppose that I am not a vision, Jim?" she asked with smiling lips. "Suppose that it really should be I?" "Then I should have to go," he said firmly. "I cannot trust myself with you." "Then let us pretend that I am a vision," she urged. "I really ought to scold you for keeping yourself hidden all these years." "It was a coward's retreat," he admitted, "but I could not see you the wife of that man." "And so you left me alone in my misery," she said reproachfully. Morton shook his head. "It was not that," he said soberly. "It was that I cared too much for your fair name."

"I know," she said tenderly; "but, Jim, you might have left some word whereby we could have found you." "To bring me back to misery?" "To happiness," she said. "You seem to have found misery where you went." She looked at the face of the man. Every line was touched by the hand of sorrow. Six years before he had been a laughing faced boy. She could remember his every expression. Now his face had gained a seriousness that because it well. He had not sought for godfellowship in dissipation, and the girl was glad. "I suppose that I do show it," he said, noting her glance. "But you, being only a vision, have not changed. Your eyes have gained a sweet seriousness, but otherwise it is the face that has been before me all these years. You have come to me in many lands. Lucy, but these seem a reality to the vision here that I have never known before. I wish that I might always hold you so dear."

"Wedded to a vision?" she asked mockingly. "Would that content you?" "It had to content me all these years," he said simply. "It is better so than that I should seek the reality to rob her of her fair name." "And yet that night," she whispered. "I was almost ready to say yes. Jim. Had you persevered I should have yielded." "I knew it," he agreed, "and for that reason I went away so far that no word might reach me and tempt me back to your side. Since I left New York I have spoken to no one whom I tried to know. I did see Teddy Farrington in London once, but he did not see me, and I escaped him, but lately something seemed to call me back. I have been fighting it off for two years, but I grew hungry for the sight of home, to hear the sound of your voice and to look upon your dear face again. I never dreamed that I should find you here; that we should have our brief hour alone."

"And are you content with the hour?" "It is better so. Should I stay on it would all come back. I think I shall return on the steamer Saturday. I-I am not as strong as I thought." "May I go with you?" she asked softly as her hand slipped into his. "Lucy!" The agony of his tones thrilled her. "You silly boy," she whispered as the head bent toward him. "Don't you know that it was I who led you home? I could not find you save with my spirit and my love, and I have not called you in vain." "But your husband," he stammered. "He died two years ago," she said simply. "That was why I called you, dear. You answered to the voice of love."

Funny Toothache Cures. Before the days of dentists and when people generally believed in the value of charms there were ever so many mysterious ways of preventing tooth-aches. One of these was to dress the right side of the body first—right stocking, right shoe, right sleeve, right glove. A favorite plan in Scotland was to draw a tooth, salt it well and burn it in full view on glowing coals. In Cornwall many save their teeth by biting the first young fern that appears.

The custom of catching a common ground mole, cutting off the paw which the little creature still lives and wearing them is traced to Staffordshire, England. Some people who are fond of exercise believe that walking twelve miles—no more, no less—to get a splinter of the toothache tree will drive away the worst ache and pain that ever tortured a poor tooth. The belief that toothache is caused by a worm at the roots is prevalent in many parts of the world; hence this cure. Reduce several different kinds of herbs—the greater variety the better—to a powder and inhale the incense. Afterward breathe into a cup of water and the worm will be gone forever.

The Real Thing. Two women were "discussing some new neighbors who had moved into one of the most sumptuous houses in their city." "They seem to be very rich," said the first. "Oh, they are," said the second. "Shall you call?" "Decidedly!" "You are sure, are you, that they are—quite correct, quite—er—good form?" "Oh, my dear, I'm positive," said the second woman. "They have thirty servants, eighteen horses, twelve dogs, seven automobiles and one child."—Des Moines Register.

After reading the public statement of this party, given below, you must agree to this conclusion: A remedy which cured years ago, which has kept the kidneys in good healthy order, can be relied upon to perform the same work in other cases. Read On. G. S. Cooper, farmer, living three miles northeast of Salem, Ore., on R. 1, D. No. 2 says: "I just as emphatically recommend Doan's Kidney Pills today as I did some three years ago. At that time I received the results of a long and painful attack of kidney trouble, which was cured by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. The trouble started from too heavy lifting, resulting in my back being strained and ever after there was a dull aching over my kidneys, and through the loins. I just promptly tried Doan's Kidney Pills. I also know of some of my neighbors who have used your remedy and found it most reliable."

For sale by all druggists. This remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills, is sold by the United States Dispensary, 209 N. 2nd St., St. Louis, Mo. Remember the name. Doan's Pills take no other name.
