The soil is good; there is little doubt of that, as it grows fine vegetablee, and splendid fruit, and the time will come when the entire present waste of burned timber land will be reclaimed, and inhabited by a thrifty and prosperous people. But the hard part is the clearing of the dead timber, which is a task the average Oregonian turns down with both hands.

Washington Grange, of Pumpkin Ridge, we are told, had a most interesting exhibit at their meeting last week, which assumed the proportions of a small fair. The display of vegetables, prunes and other fruit, was highly creditable to the Grange. Mr. Kelly showed the products of the Eastern black and Australian black walnuts, and the improved butternut, which were equal to the best grown anywhere W. R. Harris, county fruit inspecter, was present, and made a talk en the value of spraying and cleaning up old orchards, and is loud in his praise of the people of that section, in exhibiting their products. and in the interest taken in good farming and orchard work.

F. E. Hunteinger, of this place, met with an accident, Saturday, which will lay him up for some weeks. While assisting to load ties at the Southern Pacific depot, for Tompkins, his right foot was caught under a timber and badly crushed. His injuries were attended to by Dr. A. B. Bailey. Mr. Huntsinger is now a firm believer in accident insurance. He had taken out an accident policy in October, and will draw down enough for expenses while he is taking his enforced vacation.
