That the tariff is a local question has long been maintained. Congress is now trying to revise it, and the spectacle of democrats opposing a reduction on sugar, and other commodities, and of republicans seeking to lower the tariff on certain other commodities, proves the statement. Party lines are all shot to pieces on the tariff.

The northwest is in condition to enjoy great prosperity, this year. An era of great development is upon us, and the heavy immigration tending hitherwards will help to populate the state, and at the same time bring in a large amount of money to assist in building up the country. Oregon has been slow to make advancement, but as the East is just beginning to find out about our wonderful resources, we shall make up for lost time.
