

Born, to the wife of M. C. Hewitt, Hillsboro, May 26, 1909, a boy. F. D. Odert, a Tuslatin farmer, is just returned to his family after an absence since the middle of January. He states that he drank wine in a restaurant in Portland, and remembered no more until he awoke in a hospital in Sacramento. He states that he was und bound in a box car, and had been brutally beaten. He had $250 when he was drugged in Portland, at when he was found in Sacramento he had but $5 in his pocket. Odert met his family in Portland the first of the week, and has sold at his farm and will remove to Idaho. The whole matter seems to have an air of mystery about it.

Farm of 80 acres for rent, 15 acres in cultivation; ample buildings; barn for 6 cows and 2 horses—Inquire of J. M. Brown. 8 ft

The West Union baseball club came down from their homes in the Northland, according to a Reedville correspondent, Sunday, and crossed bats with the Reedville boys. The fireworks lasted for a matter of two hours, and when the dust lifted sufficiently, I left the Reedville team with a score of 27 to West Union's 37. The Reedville boys are determined on revenge.

Argus and Oregonian, $2.25.

Two loads of last year's rye straw passed through town yesterday for the Portland markets. The straw is used in stuffing horse collars, and brings a good price.

M. C. Hewitt has the job of moving the Peter Nelson barn from its present site to the store at Orenco. The barn is 30x50, and was bought by the Oregon Nursery Co.

Attorney M. J. McMahon, of Portland, was in town yesterday, with business at the court house.

How Sherman "Put the Lid On"

DURING the siege of Atlanta some of the Confederate batteries opposing Sherman on the west front of the city were sheltered from attack by a mountain which could not readily be scaled by Federal artillery. After long delay and tedious labor the light field-pieces of the Eleventh Indiana battery were hauled to the crest of the mountain, where the men of the Second Massachusetts had cut a roadway and constructed earth and log pits to shield the guns. A day was fixed, the earliest possible, to open fire upon the lines below. Sherman, General George H. Thomas, the "Rock of Chickamauga," "Fighting Joe" Hooker and General J. M. Brannan, Thomas' chief of artillery, were on the ground to witness the effect of the fire, which was expected to open the way for a successful attack upon Confederate positions which baffled the advance of Thomas' troops.

The time was August, and the heavy, stifling atmosphere inclined the men of both armies to suspend activity. The stillness of death reigned everywhere except around the isolated battery on the mountain top. There the gunners moved with the grim energy of soldiers facing a crisis. Guns were trained upon the most conspicuous and vulnerable targets. Sherman and his lieutenants stood apart, scanning with fieldglasses the camps where the shots were to strike.

At last the signal was given. Battery men went forward to pull the lanyards and send the shots home, when attention was diverted by the soft pealing tones of a bell trembling on the heavy air across the valley. Louder and still louder the measured chimes sounded over the city, over the camps, up to the mountain crest. Sherman raised a warning finger to gunners, who looked into the eyes of their officers for explanation of this strange gesture. The officers, equally non-plused, looked to the generals, and Sherman spoke out calmly, but in tones for all to hear, "Gentlemen, we will not open fire today." Then, turning to the chief of artillery, he said, in the same quiet tones, "General Brannan, you will open fire tomorrow."

"Today" was the Sabbath, a day, according to Sherman's orders, not to be interrupted by the inferno of guns and shells.—Harper's Weekly.

The bridge builder with Stonewall Jackson's army was a rare character if the following story be true:

The Union soldiers, retreating from the valley of Virginia, burned a bridge over the Shenandoah. Jackson, who wanted to pursue, sent for his old bridge builder.

"Sir," he said, "you must keep men at work all day and all night and finish that bridge by tomorrow morning. My engineer shall give you the plan."

Old Miles saluted and withdrew.

Early the next morning the general sent for Miles again.

"Well, sir," said Jackson, "did the engineer give you the plan for the bridge?"

"General," said the old man slowly, "the bridge is done, I don't know whether the picture is or not."—Herold and Presbyterian.
