Oregon has had what is known here as a "hard winter," but when you realize that 10 above is the coldest we have had in Washington County, as compared to the extreme cold of the East, you are bound to realize that the Beaver state, is, after all, a Paradise.

The State Grange is taking an active interest in attempting to preserve the primary and direct legislation, and practically every Grange that has taken any action in the matter has voted to sustain the primary law. The Grange has been instrumental in getting something fine legislation enacted and they seem to go ahead regardless of what the politicians want.

PULP WOOD IN ALASKA.

Transportation Facilities Only Needed to Open Up Enormous Forests.

Another valuable item has been added to Alaska's growing list of undeveloped resources. Recent expert examination of the timber in the Sushitna basin has confirmed the belief that it is pulp wood of a high quality. The timber is popular, cottonwood and spruce, but little of which is of commercial value for lumber. The land on which this growth stands includes the 1,500,000 or more acres estimated as grazing and farming land and on which homesteading recently began. This area, distributed among the various valleys of the basin, is for the most part covered with a luxuriant growth of wild redtop grass, with little underbrush and only a moderate stand of timber. It is obvious that with a reasonably convenient market for pulp wood and water transportation, of which there is much, the cost of clearing these lands might be greatly reduced if not made a profit by the sale of the timber as a byproduct.

On Kenai peninsula, along the line of the seventy mile Alaska Central railroad, alone there are many thousands of acres of available pulp wood, and this will be increased with almost every mile of the road's extension toward the Matanuska coal fields. The value of this supply of pulp wood in American territory and the practicability of utilizing it was first pointed out by Levi Chubuck of the department agriculture, who visited the region last summer. Still more recently Senator George J. Baird of Canada went in the Matanuska coal fields and was easily impressed by the vast area of up woods as well as the splendidazing lands they stood on. He predicts the rapid settlement of this region by farmers and cattlemen.

TONS OF ALASKA COPPER.

port of Geologist Brooks Shows Enormous Yield This Year. The season of mining in Alaska has been a prosperous one," says Alfred Brooks, geologist in charge of the work of the United States geological survey, who has just returned Washington from his annual "swing around the circle" in the far north. "While dry weather and other favorable conditions have curtailed placer gold production at Nome, most of the other camps have either attained or increased their output. Figures of gold output are not yet available, but it seems probable that production for 1909 will be between nineteen and twenty million dollars. The low price of copper has encouraged mining of that metal, about half a dozen properties shipping during 1909. It appears probable that the Alaska copper output for year will exceed 4,000,000 pounds."

ne Light in Two Thousand Miles. or the first time the great southern of Alaska, more than 2,000 miles, has this winter a lighthouse, though one of the most dangerous and my coasts in the world and difficult of navigation, even in summer, area has been wholly neglected now. The first light is on Cape Chubuck, at one of the entrances to the William sound. There are many other places where lights and signals are almost as urgently needed, notably Cape St. Elias, where men are often held up for days use of fog and a long, hidden Other lights are, however, to be used next year.

ommy's New Year's Resolution. before the school closed for the holidays the teacher urged her pupils make at least one good resolution for 1910. As she finished her talk a boy in the front seat raised and, "Tommy," said the teacher, "glad you are going to make a resolution. What is it, my boy?" "ease, teacher," he replied, "I ain't to hit no boy in 1910 that's big me."

J. J. Hartley, who two years ago bought 91.91 acres just north of Glenoe, paying $5,500 for the ranch, sold it the other day to Carl, Nels and Herman Bergren and Paul Paulson, the consideration being $10,000. The ranch is but a short distance from Glenoe, and will doubtless advance further in value when the United gets to operating. Mr. Hartley, however, concluded that he had made good interest on his money, and was satisfied to let go and take a chance at something else.

Meanwhile the millions from below are pouring through Cordova in supplies and materials and cash for the forcing through of the railroad to the famous Bonanza mine and neighboring properties in the region around the head of the Chitina river. The building of this road is one of the most daring railroad enterprises since the Rocky mountains were first penetrated. The Copper river valley, up which the road must run, is notorious for its violent winter windstorms, its shifting, uncertain silt beds; racing, vagabond streams; deep snow; rocky, slide-scoured canyons and advancing glaciers. The river itself, the only large stream emptying from the Alaskan interior to the southward, is a turbulent, silt-laden, ice-bearing torrent in which no man can swim twenty strokes. At one place it runs between great living glaciers that discharge millions of tons of ice into its current each day of the summer months, and here the railroad must run low.

Scenery Will Become World Famous.

The scenery is of unique grandeur, but these scenic features, so soon to become world famous, have represented to the engineers problems of unequalled complexity. Many of these problems were repeatedly declared to be impossible of solution even under the most favorable conditions of weather and with unlimited time. Two years ago next month the first lot of material and supplies arrived in Cordova. Since then construction has been pushed forward with almost unceasing momentum.

In these two years a permanent road of a high standard has been completed to the mouth of the Tielke river, 102 miles from Cordova. Three great steel bridges have been set over the swift flowing Copper river, and a fourth across a great ice-scoured channel, the berg lake of Miles glacier is far advanced and will be one of the engineering wonders of the world. Long stretches of tunnel and rock cut and piling have been finished and a fleet of river steamers built and placed in commission.

At Cordova end, where there were no problems of importance, much money has been spent in preparing for the handling of a heavy train service to and from the mines.

The iron in the blood of the men who are building this road shows apparently in the blood of Cordova, for also there has been fighting to do. "Made" towns like this one do not grow of their own volition in a single year. It takes organization, confidence and much toll where one's home must, as here, actually be carved from the stern hills.

Brave Consideration.

"I suppose," the young matron said, addressing the spinster who was "getting along in years," "you never married because it has been impossible for you to find a man whom you considered good enough."

"Oh, no! I have found plenty of men who were good enough, but I have always felt that it was a shame to spoil a good thing." —Chicago Record-Herald.

A Hard Task.

He was a country poet.

He wasn't a man of worldly means.

No currency jingled in his jeans,

For it's hard times writing for magazines.

When the magazines don't know it.

—Lippincott's.

Finding a New Ending.

"I suppose you will end your book as usual," And they lived happy ever after?"

"Not a bit of it. I will say: They are now happily married, but no man knows what a day may bring forth. The author, however, hopes for the best." —Boston Herald.
