The City and the Country are bound together by the telephone line.

The farmer and his family use the rural telephone constantly, calling up each other and the market town on all sorts of matters and for all sorts of supplies and information.

City people also find the rural telephone of great advantage. A traveler from his room in the hotel talks with the farm folks miles away.

The farmer himself may travel far and still talk home over the Long Distance Lines of the Bell System.

IN A SPIRIT OF MISCHIEF

By SHEILA ESTHER DUNN

"My child, what's the matter between you and George?"

"Oh, aunt, I'm vexing him!" "Don't do it."

A young girl sat at the feet of a woman of ninety. The tender curves in the face of the one contrasted strongly with the wrinkles of the other.

"When I was your age," the old woman continued after a pause, "General Jackson was president. He was a great fighting man, and since he not only fought the enemies of his country, but his own enemies, his example infected every one."

"But our southern girls had the same romantic ideas as the young man. We thought it a fine thing to flirt with two or three men and at last give our selves to some suitor who was ready to play Don Quixote in our defense."

"I was at the time playing a game with both Albert Stevenson and Fitz Hugh Fairfax. I had one other string to my bow, but I have forgotten his name. And yet at one time I thought I should marry him. Oh, dear, how one's memory fails after so many years!"

"One day I was walking in the garden with Fairfax. We sat down on a bench under a tree. Stevenson called, and they told him I was in the garden. I saw him leave the house and come toward us. Fairfax was turned away from him. I am sure Fairfax was about to propose to me. He was bending over me with his face near to mine. Suddenly I jumped up, assuming an offended appearance. At the same time Stevenson joined us."

"He asked Fitz Hugh what it all meant. Very red in the face, he told Stevenson to ask me. Stevenson turned to me, and I, acting under the guidance of the spirit of devilry that was in me, said never a word, but walked to the house."

"I was no sooner on the gallery than it occurred to me that some real trouble might come out of my freak, and, returning to the young man, I told them that there was nothing of moment between Mr. Fairfax and me and they were to consider the matter as not having happened. Then when Fairfax gave me that cold, contemptuous look, which I can see at this very moment, my blood ran cold. I knew he had loved me, that I loved him and that I had lost him."

"Neither of the young men spoke. As I had nothing more to say and influenced by the look Fitz Hugh had given me, I went away, leaving them together. I made a second mistake in doing this, but I couldn't remain where Fitz Hugh was after that look. I wished to go to my room and weep. There was more to weep for than the loss of his respect, and no man can really love a woman without that. It did not occur to me that after I had exonerated him there would be any trouble between him and Stevenson."

"I lay awake that night till dawn and then fell asleep. I awoke late in the morning and went downstairs into the dining room."

"'La's a massy, Missy Imogen,' said our table servant, 'have yo' heard de news?'"

"'No,' I said. 'What is it?'"

"'Mars' Stevenson and Mars' Fitz Hugh fought a duel dis mawnt' befo' sunup, an' Mars' Fitz Hugh killed Mars' Stevenson.'"

"I sank on the floor in a swoon. "It was a long time before I recovered from an attack of brain fever. I recovered from the fever, but that's all I have recovered from to this day."

"Fitz Hugh never came to see me or, as far as I could learn, asked for me. I knew that in his heedless act and its result I had fixed a great gulf between him and me. He went back to Virginia. He never married, nor did I. But we never met again."

"A friend of both parties told me what had happened after I left the two young men. Stevenson assumed that I had exonerated Fitz Hugh because I was magnanimous and did not wish to make trouble. He posed as my defender and sent a challenge to the man who had insulted me. I insulted me! In another moment he would have asked me to be his wife. They fought with pistols, and at the first shot Fitz Hugh had fired in the air. Stevenson then made some irritating remark, whereupon Fitz Hugh on the second shot had sought to wing his opponent. By this shot he unintentionally killed his antagonist."

"By that one act I lost the only man I ever loved, made him a murderer with a sting upon his conscience, caused the premature death of one who loved me and have lived for three-quarters of a century under a blight."

"No, no, dear, don't vex your lover. Many a pair of young lovers have been separated and their lives turned away by a spirit of mischief on the part of the girl. But mine is the worst of all."

Antiquity of Beer. So long ago as 2000 B. C. the Egyptians made beer from barley and other grains. The historian Herodotus speaks of it.

Two Oceans Pass. There is a spot in the Yellowstone National park where the same stream sends water to the Pacific and the Atlantic oceans at the same time. It is called Two Oceans pass. When the stream overflows, the water spreads over the continental divide, some going east and some west.

His Plea. "I cannot sing the old songs!" she yelled with all her might. The young man who was calling thought some of taking flight. "I cannot sing the old songs!" she whooped a second time. The caller sat and listened with forbidding silence.

She turned the music over and pounded on the keys. Then she looked again more loudly. He fell upon his knees. "I cannot sing the old songs!" she belated. With a sigh. He rose and wildly pleaded, "For God's sake do not try!"

Kept Her Busy. "My husband is so helpful in our household work. You know I just love to be tidying up and cleaning and rearranging all the time." "And he takes a hand in the tidying up?" "Well—indirectly. He throws things around and out of place so that I'll have something to do."—St. Paul Dispatch.

The Yellowhammer. Once upon a morning dreary as I lingered, still a-weary. In the warm and downy covers, which with rest I loved the more.

While I thought of further napping suddenly there came a tapping. As of some one soundly tapping, rapping on the upper floor.

"The bird that I mistooked, 'rapping on the upper floor. I have heard her doves before." —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

On the Trail. "Do you see that man going along with his head in the air, sauntering with his nose?" "Yes, I know him."

"I suppose he believes in talking to the good, pure ozone." "No. He's hunting for a motor garage, I believe."—London Sketch.

Kept Apart. "If women would only be bolder," declared the suffragette. "And just stand shoulder to shoulder. We'd win the ballot yet."

But one woman candidly told her. When she at last had finished. "We can't stand shoulder to shoulder. We'd get our hats all crushed." —Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Smitan Smiles. "Alma likes me," remarked Johnny confidentially. "You are very vain, my boy, I fear," remonstrated his mother. "What reason have you for saying such a thing?" "Cause she's always running up and billing me in the back."—New York Times.

Season's Acrostic. Billing and. Base everywhere. Attractive attire. Shimmering abode. Happy husband. Oppressed ozone. Rocky rendezvous. Equitable errantry. —Life.

Up the Rhine. Mrs. Robinson—And were you up the Rhine? Mrs. De Jones—Just returned from a continental trip—I should think so—right to the very top. What a splendid view there is from the summit!—Tit-Bits.

To Dr. Fletcher. For general information. Do you see a question? Is eternal mastication? The price of good digestion? —Chicago Tribune.

The Point Proved. "Why did you quit your job?" "The boss said I was a fool." "But he didn't discharge you, did he?" "Did you resign just for that?" "Yes."

"Well, I guess the boss was right." —Cleveland Leader.

The Sportsman's Viewpoint. Fighting is done, as you may be aware, in accord with the pugilist's law. Fishes and fighters are often put out by landing a hook in the jaw. —Chicago News.

A Day Lost. First Church Worker—How was the meeting today? Second Church Worker—Very uninteresting. Every one of the sisters was there, so there was no one to talk about.—Yonkers Statesman.

Second Thought. He kissed her first upon the cheek. But there found such a drought. He changed his tactics, so to speak, And kissed her on the mouth. —Toledo Blade.

Success. Landlady—I believe in letting coffee boil for thirty minutes. That's the only way to get the goodness out of it. New Boarder (tasting his and drinking it)—You have succeeded admirably, ma'am.—Chips.
