LAST SPRAYING FOR CODLING MOTH

Every Fruit Grower in County
Should get Busy at Once

DO NOT BE TOO SURE THERE'S NONE

B. Leis Writes a Letter to the County
Fruit Growers

Washington County is rapidly assuming some importance as a grower of marketable apples and this is the result of earnest care in spraying. That the condition could be much improved goes without saying, but each year sees a better product. The latter part of August is the time for the last spraying of the Codling moth, and B. Leis, the Beaverton fruit grower, writes the Argus the following letter, which should be persuaded and acted upon by every apple grower in this section:

"To the Editor: As the time for spraying for the second brood of codling moth is near at hand I think I shall for the last time call the attention of those that grow apples that this second brood will be with us the latter part of this month, and that we must spray again if we expect clean fruit. Even if you have sprayed for your first brood, do not by any means neglect the spraying for this last hatch. Do not let it go by saying 'I have no worms now, and what is the use of spraying again.' If you had killed them all, and your neighbor has done the same, then I would agree with you—but some of them have perhaps sprayed for the scale when the fruit inspector was after them, and there it may have ended for the season. Now I think there should be a law—if there is not—to make growers spray for the worms as well as for the scale. Of what use is it to spray when your neighbor does not.

To show the necessity of the second spraying, take my own case. Last year after the first spraying of my own trees I had clean apples, and not a worm was to be found. In fact, I offered 10 cents for each worm found in the orchard, and it was not claimed. I was very hurried at the time when the second spraying should have been done and concluded to not indulge in the extra work of cleaning out the second brood. What was the result? At picking time I had 30 per cent wormy fruit! I am well aware of how little interest is taken in the fruit industry in this county, and I notice that fruit is made secondary to livestock at our fairs, locally, so that there is very little inducement to exhibit. A little encouragement would induce us all to get in and show what can be done in horticulture—but what's the use? I intend to have an exhibit at the coming Hillsboro Street Fair, but the lack of interest in this great industry—the most profitable of all—makes it discouraging. We can raise fruit in old Washington County equal—yes, better—to the Hood River product, and yet Hood River beats us at displays. Why? The answer is very simple. Hood River orchardists attend to their trees and they do not try to put wormy apples in the bottoms of the boxes—and those missed by the Codling moth on the top. I have picked three trees of Gravensteins this season and got about 100 boxes of apples fit for a king and out of the lot we found but two worms. Do you think that Hood River—or any other place, can beat this? I think not. I forget to say that the trees were 18 years old. The result is due to care and attention—and this why I wish to impress the spraying proposition on the apple-growing public. If we will attend to our trees, we can beat the world for good, well-shaped and the best flavored apples. I do not know what I shall do if we get 'moved' into Multnomah—yes, I shall move across the line, for I don't think we can raise as good fruit in Multnomah as we can in good old Washington County."
