If there's anything in a name Hill should run his feeder to the South through "Hills-boro."

It is somewhat paradoxical to witness the pulling of hops and the pushing of prohibition at one and the same time.

With Garfield and Pinchot on the stage with Roosevelt, at the Denver meeting, it begins to look as though the attempts of politicians to discredit the Frenchman and his aides is for naught.

The ovation tendered Theodore Roosevelt wherever he goes is one of the most remarkable tributes paid a public man in the century. Bryan comes the nearest to Roosevelt in the role of a popular idol—but Roosevelt has been up against the horned bulls of finance and for this reason he stands alone. There is absolutely no question that a majority of the Republicans in every state would vote a primary ballot for the Dutchman should they have such an opportunity. The common people believe in him—and the corporation sympathizers do not—and that's the entire story.
