The dry season has been rather welcome to the sportsmen, for it has meant a better supply of game birds than usual. Along the Oregon Electric, between here and Portland, passengers on every car can see many a China rooster in the grain fields. The open season will be on after October 1.

Dave Houston, of Fair Acres, East Hillsboro, has a splendid crop of apples this season. Some of the trees are so heavily laden that it has been necessary to prop every large limb—and even then some of the boughs have broken. He will have several hundred boxes, and as they are in good shape he will be able to market them all at a good price.

We are now better than ever prepared to supply our customers. We have a good supply of flooring, rustic, shiplap and finishing lumber and can furnish good house bills on short notice. We also have a good stock of all kinds of common lumber. We have in stock all sizes of tile from 3 to 16 inch that are first quality; also brick and building blocks. Try our building blocks for your fruit or potato house, or foundation for your buildings—better and cheaper than brick or concrete. Parties wanting orders delivered will do well to place them early, while the roads are good, and our teams are not too busy. In the past we find that it is the failing of many people to wait till the roads are almost impassable, and then place their orders for delivery, at a cost of twice what it can be done for now. So don't forget, this year, while our stock is complete. Groner & Rowell Company.

TALKING IN FIGURES.

Significance of Certain Numbers in the Telegraphers' Code.

"In the telegraphers' code numbers have special significance of which the general public is not aware," remarked a veteran key night the other day. "Most everybody knows that 30 means 'good night,' or the end of a story, but few outside the profession know that 31 is also a code sign. Railroad operators, however, know that this call is a signal to the operator at the other end to come back and repeat train signals to the sending operator. It also has another meaning. 'Train order' to be signed by conductor and engine driver. 'Nineteen' on the other hand, means that the train order is not to be signed by conductor or engine driver. Twenty-four has also the latter significance on some roads.

"Five is simply an interrogation point and in the vernacular could be translated 'Anything doing?' Thirteen signifies 'Do you understand?' Twenty-five means 'busy,' but nobody seems to know how it came to have that significance unless perhaps it means that the operator is still in the midst of his work, being some distance away from 30.

"Seventy-three means 'last regards,' and newspaper men and operators employ this expression constantly. Of course 23 has come to mean in this numerical language just what it does in ordinary parlance, 'skidoo,' 'vamosse' or 'hit out' or any of the thousand and one other equivalents."—New York Herald.

The Governor's Quick Wit.

While talking to a former governor of Illinois, who was noted for the quickness of his wit, an English tourist spoke with special fervor of a slight he had seen in another state. "I attended a Sunday service for the inmates of the state prison," he said, "and I learned that of the 208 persons now confined there all but twelve voluntarily attend religious services held in the prison chapel twice each Sunday."

"Most extraordinary," said the governor musingly. "I am sorry to say it is not so with us. But then," he added soberly, "in Illinois, you see, most of the respectable people do not come to prison."—Lippincott's.

Sign Language.

Brown and Jones were having their usual stroll and had just had a few minutes' conversation with Robinson, who was accompanied by his wife. After they had gone on some little distance Brown said to Jones: "Did you notice that Mrs. Robinson never said a word?" "Oh, yes," said Jones. "You see, she's deaf and dumb."

"Lucky chap is Robinson. But I suppose she can talk with her fingers?" asked Brown. "I think so," replied Jones, "for Robinson hasn't a dozen hairs left on his head."

Settlement Work.

"Come into a fortune, didn't he?" "Yes, a big one." "What's he doing these days?" "He has become interested in settlement work."

"Well, that ought to keep him occupied for awhile; he owed everybody."—Houston Post.

Couldn't.

"There, there! Take it cool." "Take it cool?" "Yes." "I am perfectly willing, but the infernal weather won't let me."

A Rationale.

"Is she married?" "Who?" "That stunning woman over there." "Oh, yes; she is married sometimes."

But Don't.

"I can whistle." "I never heard you." "Therefore you owe me a deep debt of gratitude."

Her Pirate Lover

By ARTHUR L. SANDS
Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Molly Van Dusen and I pitched our troth one evening under the parapet of the battery in the town of New Amsterdam. We were looking down the bay, and a ship, the first that had arrived in several weeks, was coming up under full sail. It was sunset. All these things I remember well, for it was the happiest moment of my life and whatever was visible to my dear love and me was deeply impressed upon my mind.

That was a very hot season, and Molly was dropping from the heat. The very next day after she had promised to be my wife her father determined to send her to the country—some in Connecticut to spend some time with her mother's brother, Pasha Mathews, hoping that the sea air would strengthen her. I was both to let her go at such a time and especially since the captain of the ship that came in at the time of our betrothal reported having been chased by a pirate, and it was well known that the buccaneers were at any time liable to make a descent on the coast.

But Molly's father packed her off to the coach leaving for Boston, directing that she be put off at a bit of headland jutting out into Long Island sound not far from the settlement at New Haven.

It was a sad day for both of us when she got into the coach and I watched it pass out of sight among the bowlers lying to the eastward of the town. And even after the coach had grown so dim with distance as scarcely to be discovered I could see Molly's white handkerchief streaming a signal of her love for me.

I found the town unbearable without her. I played at bowls in the green near the battery and sat in my boat on Hudson's river, but I could not get on without my Molly, so I determined to go to her. I mounted my sore steed August morning, with my saddlebags well filled with articles, and on the third day reached the New Haven settlement. After partaking of a dinner and giving my horse a good feed I recounted and in three hours time came in sight of that headland where dwelt Pasha Mathews. There were rocks and about beaches on this shore and an occasional knoll covered with long grass. An Indian showed me Mr. Mathews' house set on one of these knolls. I trotted on where the road ran near the water and presently looking ahead saw two persons standing on a rock that protruded out a few feet above the surface of the sea.

As I drew nearer I could see that one of these persons was a man and the other a woman. The man was in an unusual dress. What was my surprise when I came near enough to distinguish his apparel to see that he wore a hat with a large brim, a short coat and trousers to his knees, during at the bottom of the legs, while a broad belt dived with knives was tucked about his waist.

At once I was filled with alarm, feeling sure that there had been a descent of pirates on the settlers and this fellow had carried off one of the women. Having a pistol in my holster, I drew it forth, saw to the printing and made ready for an attempt to rescue this poor woman. Dismounting, I left my horse in a thicket and, stealing up to the couple, hid behind a rock and, taking sure aim at the pirate, pulled the trigger.

The flint refused to light the printing, and luckily, for at the moment the pirate put his arm around the woman's waist, and the two stood looking at the incoming tide. Were she a willing captive it would only distress her if I killed her lover. But what was my horror when she turned her face my way to see my Molly!

At first I was minded to kill them both, but, shrinking from having Molly's blood on my hands, I desisted and advanced with my pistol in hand. "Have you gone mad, Mistress Van Dusen," I exclaimed, "that you will accept the caresses of a pirate, or have he murdered all your folk and you are making a pretense in order to watch your opportunity to get away from him?"

As I spoke I held the pirate under cover of my weapon, and he turned ran like a deer toward Mr. Mathews' house.

"See the coward run!" I cried, half minded to shoot him in his tracks. And then what did Molly do but burst into loud laughter, and, sitting down on the rock, she kept it up till I grew hot with choler and said: "For shame, Molly, to turn from me to a pirate, and a coward at that! Speak before I kill him!"

This brought her to her senses. "Forbear," she said, "Do not kill a girl." "A girl! And have the women turned buccaneers?"

With that she fell to laughing again, and I could get nothing from her for a long while, when she controlled her mirth and said: "Tonight uncle gives a dance to the settlers roundabout, and all are to come dressed in some strange costume. This pirate who has just closed the door of the house is my cousin, Pasha Mathews. She is dressed in her costume for the dance. We two came out to watch for the boat bearing guests from New Haven."

"Heaven!" I exclaimed. "Had not my flint failed I would have shot her!"

Still Wondering.
"He can't take a hint."
"He doesn't seem to be very bright."

"I should say not. The other evening his girl handed him his hat, and her father set the bulldog on him, and he came around to ask me if I thought they meant anything by it."
