I ^T would take the ordinary person a thousand years if he were to at- tempt to put into practice all the cheer up philosophy that he receives in a year.
Just the right sort of opportunity is all some of us lack to do-well, say any kind of a stunt.
The worst thing about getting what you want is that it won't stay what you want afterward.
It isn't difficult to please some peo- ple-which is another thing that fre- quently makes them boresome.
It is one thing to make an excuse and another and quite different to get it to work.

Painless. Painless. The falling down of London bridge Would seem a great disaster. But as the ancient structure drops The fun is only faster. It's fallen down a militon times, And no one faints or grumbles. It's good for generations yet To watch it as it tumbles.

And when another fall is due The children shout the warning. No heed give those who are at hand, All thoughts of danger scorning. No watchman comes to raise a hand, This vandailism checking. The youngsters set it up again And go on with the wrecking.

That London bridge is falling down Is hardly news worth telling. The merchants hear it and proceed With buying and with selling. And passersby along the street Will hardly stop to wonder Will hardly stop to wonder Although they know a lady fair Is at that moment under.

Then keep on tumbling, London bridge And winning our affection. You ought to do it well by now, Since practice brings perfection. Use daily hardens us till now The thing is not appailing. And you may be resigned to it, For you must still keep failing.
