THE NEW TOWN

The new town of North Plains, on the United, near Glencoe, is having a big sale these days by the Ruth Trust Co., of Portland. North Plains is center of a rich farming district, and its closeness to Portland is attracting Portland suburbanites, as well as people who are looking for an investment. The rails will soon be laid through the new city, and Mays Brothers are to start a two story brick block and occupy it in the early Summer. Other business houses are to be started in the near future, and already many business lots as well as residence property have been sold. The newly laid out city is to have electric lights and a water system that will be adequate for all demands, and mountain water will later succeed the deep well system which is to be put in operation.

Many wise ones, who have an eye for location, do not hesitate to say that North Plains is coming city, and they are putting their money, as well as faith, into the property.

R. A. Thompson and J. E. Hanrahan, of Portland, are the selling agents at Hillsboro, and they have already made a number of transfers. They say the new city is to have sidewalks and all the modern conveniences, and when things move the streets are to be macadamized. Messrs. Thompson & Hanrahan are stopping at the Commercial Hotel.

John A. Jeffrey, who defended Roselair, has all kinds of trouble these days. His wife has answered his divorce case, brought some months ago by the handsome attorney, and denies that she did the deserting. She says Jeffreys is the laddyback that did the absquatulating act, and she asks the court for $25 per month alimony. They were married in Salem in November, 1898, and Mrs. Jeffreys says that before he left her he transferred title to some books and furniture and to some real estate that he held in Washington County—presumably the Roselair tract, on which he held a deed subject to the Ritter mortgage.

Sam Paisley, of Buxton, and L. L. Crawford, of Crawford, were in the city Monday, returning Tuesday. They were drawn on the jury.

Corwin Foote, of near Centerville, was in town Tuesday, mixing with the rain.

Reinhold Herr was down from Seghers, Tuesday.
